THE existence and the importance of the present work have long been known to all familiar with the works of Appayya Diksita. While the present editor was making a study of it in connection with the philosophy of Srikantha, its publication was suggested to him by Vedānta Visārada S. K. Padmanābha Sāstrin of Mylapore, who willingly contributed in a very able measure the patience and scholarship required for the preparation of a The University of Madras, who generously critical edition. undertook to publish the work, required a translation to be provided. In this part of the task, the editor has had invaluable help from the University Department of Samskrt, particularly from the University Professor, Dr. C. Kunhan Raja. The two Fellows Samskrt, Mimāmsakācārya S. K. Rāmanātha Sāstrin and Mahopādhyāya Pandit V. Venketrāma Sharma, have rendered considerable assistance in going through various Manuscripts and the press copy, in correcting proofs, and in various other ways. The authorities who obliged with the loan of Manuscripts are mentioned elsewhere. Among friends who by offering suggestions and in other ways gave considerable encouragement to the editor, special mention must be made of Mr. T. G. Ārāvamuthan, Advocate, Kilpauk, and Prof. P. P. S. The paragraphing of the Samskrt text has been made to approximate to that of the translation, with the result that the former looks artificial in some cases. Time and again in the history of a country, there rise up figures of considerable interest and importance in respect of moral sincerity or religious zeal or political sagacity or scholarly erudition. These are almost gigantic in their proportions, and are not infrequently acclaimed as incarnations of an element of godhead. Appayya Diksita was such an outstanding figure in the history of South Indian scholarship. He was a marvel of learning, in width as well as depth, with remarkable powers of clear thought and forcible expression, and an indefatigable worker in the cause of truth.

Appayya's place of birth is known to be Adayapalam, a village near Conjeevaram. His works inform us that he enjoyed the patronage of three royal masters—Cinna Bomma, Cinna Timma and Venkatapati, His descendants are still found flourishing in various stations of life, in most of the Southern districts of the Presidency. The period of his life and work is known to be the 16th Century A. D. It was also generally thought on the strength of a horoscope, that he was born in 1552—1553 A. D. and that he died in 1624. But the ravages of research have not spared us this certainty. The horoscope given to the world by Sivananda-Yogin

(a 19th Century descendant and biographer of Appayya) has been disputed by a 20th Century descendant of Appayya's¹ who calls in epigraphical aid from his ancestor's native village of Adayapalam to support the suggestion that Appayya must have been born some 30 years earlier, about 1520. For the view so propounded, corroboration is sought in the tag of a verse said to be quoted by Mahāmahopādhyāya Rāju Sāstriār of Mannārgudi, purporting to be from an ancient and lost biography of Appayya Dikṣita. The arguments require to be elaborated and examined much more fully than they have been, before being accepted or rejected. That being no part of the present task, we shall pass on, contenting ourselves with the knowledge that the latter half of the 16th century seems undoubtedly to have been the period of Appayya's literary activity.

Appayya's father and grand-father were eminent teachers of Advaita. The grand-father was known as Ācārya Dīkṣita or more familiarly as Ācān Dīkṣita. He married twice, and the second wife was Totrāmbi, a Vaiṣṇava lady, daughter of Ranga Rāja, a Vaiṣṇavite. The son of this union was also called Ranga Rāja, after the maternal grand-father. This Ranga Rāja, the Advaita Ācārya, reputed as a performer of the Viśvajit sacrifice, became the father and the spiritual preceptor of the renowned Appayya. Appayya remains the most illustrious member of that family, to this day. Next to him, but next only to him comes the famous Nīlakaṇṭha, poet and prime minister, who flourished at Madura, during the days of Tirumala Nāyak. Nīlakaṇṭha was the grandson of Appayya's brother, Ācān Dikeita.

It is said that Appayya married one Sumangala or Mangalanāyaki, the daughter of Ratnakheta Dīkaita who, having rashly undertaken to make Appayya prostrate before him, found no other means of doing so, except by becoming his father-in-law. There seems to be also a bare tradition that the lady was of Vaianava birth. The dispute with Ratnakheta and its sequel find mention in the 'Ācān-Dīkaitendra-Vamāvali,' a poetical genealogy composed by Vīrarāghava Kavi, a descendant of Ācān Dīkaita.

Appayya is reputed to be the author of 104 works. Many of these are lost, not even the names being known. Of those said to be his, the authorship, ascribed often by vague tradition, is, in many cases, doubtful. The confusion is increased by the fact that some of his descendants—the father of Rāju Sāstriār of Mannārgudi, and an anubhava—advaitin of recent days who died in the early years of the present century—bore the same name and were also writers, more or less prolific. Among the 104, we have to include commentaries written by Appayya on works composed in verse by himself. Thus, the 'Ānanda Laharī' and the 'Ānanda Laharī Candrikā,' count as two works, though they may be looked upon as constituting the verse and prose parts of one work.

The greatest number of these works relate to Saiva religion or Advaita philosophy. Our author, however, was a redoubtable authority on other subjects, such as rhetoric and poetics, while his knowledge of Mimāmsā was unrivalled, as shown in his handling even of other subjects. The full extent of his grasp of Mimāmsā Sāstra may be gauged by his discussion of some knotty topics in the 'Pūrvottara-Mimāmsā-Vāda-Nakṣatra-Mālā.' His 'Kuvalavānanda' and 'Citra-Mimāṃsā' evince his knowledge of poetics and rhetoric. His appreciation of literature as such is shown by his 'Commentary on Yādavābhyudaya'. True, many of these books were written to order, having been commissioned by different royal patrons, but they are none the less thorough and masterly, for that.

Appayya combined in himself the clear-sightedness of the philosopher with the zeal of the devotee. This accounts at once for his thoroughness and his catholicism. He could sympathise with all shades of thought and belief, since to him was vouchsafed the vision of their harmonious blending in the one Resplendent Colourless Whole. He would yield to none in his passionate devotion to Siva; but he would not like sectarian devotees pull down Visnu to the level of a finite self (see commentary on verse 35 of the 'Ananda Lahari'). As an advaitin, he held that Brahman was Nirgupa; but he also held that for facility of human comprehension, He appears "as if possesing gunas, taking on the form of the blue-throated, three-eyed Being,accompanied by Amba" ('Siva tattvalviveka', Verse 13). Though the bed-rock of all the Vedas, Agamas and so on is but Advaita, "the fragrance of Advaita breaths in man only by the Grace of Him whose crest jewel is the tender digit of the Moon" ('Sivarkamanidipika,' introductory verse ?; translation by Dr. V. V. Ramana Sastrin). As an advaitin, release meant for him realisation of identity with Brahman; but this is not to be, so long as there continues in the world even a single unredeemed soul. Till the final release of all, individual release is but the attainment of the being of Isvara, We thus find throughout a spirit of sympathetic understanding and reconciliation, very far removed from dogmatic sectarianism.

And yet our author could wield his dialectical weapons forcefully, sometimes pitilessly. The extended hand of reconciliation not infrequently became the mailed fist. He does not hold, for instance, with the exaggerated claims of Madhvacarya to divinity, and inveighs against him furiously in a notable passage in the commentary on verse 31 of the 'Siva-tattva-viveka.' Though, as noted before, he had a profound regard for Visnu, holding that "only by reaching Him can that place be attained, which belongs to the Immortal, primaeval blissful Being, who is Light, etc." ('Ratna-traya-parikes,' verse 5), yet he could not brook those selfstyled Vaimavas who revited Siva or contemplated treason against His supremacy. 1 Against these he directs his righteous indignation, quoting passages condemnatory of them, from the Bhagavata, and commenting on them with great gusto (explaining "durbhagah" of the original as "samkīrņa kretra jātāh"). For error as ignorance, he seems to have had comprehension and sympathy, but none for error masquerading as the whole truth.

One of Appayya's pupils was Bhattoji Diksita, famous as the author of the 'Siddhanta Kaumudi.' Bhattoji was from Upper India, where among other things, he earned the opposition and ill-will of Panditaraja Jagannatha, a favourite of the Emperor, Shah Jehan. Bhattoji's preceptor, Appayya, also came in for a share of Jagannatha's enmity, the pupil's evil ways being set down to the master's evil influence. This Jagannatha wrote a critique of Appayya's 'Citra-Mimamsa,' called 'Citra-Mimamsa.

^{1.} It must be noted that for Appayya, Siva is above and beyond the three murtis,—Brahmā, Virnu and Rudra. He is not to be identified with Rudra, who is the embodiment of Tamas, and the Lord of Destruction, as the other two are Lords of Creation and Sustantation.

Khapdana'. It is thought that, about the period of this controversy between Bhaptoji and Jagannātha, Appayya himself was at Benares. However that may be, he spent his last days in the South, and died at Cidambaram. In his last moments, he is said to have composed a verse and a half in praise of Cidambaram and the Dancer in the Golden Hall. "This city of Chidambaram is well-known for its sacredness. Splendidly modest sons (have been born to me). Some good works have also been written. My years are more than seventy. Longing for pleasure I have none. I want nothing. Only I am anxious to see my Lord's place. There flashes in my heart the rising Sun of the light of the Lotus-feet of the Dancer of the Golden Hall" (translation by A. V. Gopalachariar, 'Yādavābhyudaya,' II. xvii). He expired in the middle of the second verse. One could wish for no more fitting finale to such a great life.

[For further information, see 'Appayya-Dikeitendra-Vijaya' by Sivänanda Yogin, 'Life of Srī Appayya Dikeita' by A. V. Gopalachariar, in Vol. II of 'Yādavābhyudaya' (S. V. V. Press), 'Appayya Dikeita' in the Siddhānta Dīpikā, IV, 261, and two articles on 'Appayya Dikeita's Age' by Y. Mahālinga Sāstrī, Journal of Oriental Research, II, 225, and III, 140.]

The present work of Appayya's—known as the 'Sivādvaita' Nirņaya' or the 'Sivādvaita Vinirņaya,' sometimes as the 'Advaita Nirņaya,' has its merits and defects, from the view-point of the average reader. It has the merit of being entirely in prose, and directed to one central idea. It has the further merit of expounding Appayya's conception not merely of Sivādvaita, but also of Suddhādvaita, some of his distinctive conceptions in regard to the latter, such as that about release finding expression here. But, in spite of fairly extensive quotations from the bhaqya of Srikaniha, it is not possible to appreciate the latter or assess it at its true worth, except in conjunction with an independent study of the bhasya. A study of the 'Nirpaya' by itself would be like reading up the criticism of a literary work, in the absence of direct acquaintance with that work. The difficulty is increased by the fact that certain doctrines of the bhasyakara—such as the atomicity of the self are not mentioned or discussed by Appayya. the 'Nirpaya' deserves to be studied, if for nothing else, at least as a remarkable example of our author's dialectical skill and clearness of thought. One other reason why the work is valuable to the students of Srikansha is the reference to Sudarsanacarya otherwise known as Haradatta. With reference to a verse quoted by the dialectical opponent from this author's 'Śruti-Sūkti-Mālā, ' it is said that Srikantha came after Haradatta. This, combined with very definite suggestions in the 'Ananda Lahari' to the effect that Rāmānuja followed in the foot-steps of Śrīkantha, seems to be of great help in fixing the period of Srīkantha. If the date is still uncertain, it is because Haradatta's period is not known; for, the obituary verse, whereon reliance used to be placed as giving the date of his death, proves to contain conflicting astronomical details and is inaccurate or spurious.1

Appayya tries to be as clear in his exposition, as in his thought. His attempts, however, are not always successful. He frequently labours his points to the extent of being tiresome. And, often enough, he leads us into a labyrinth of words from which he escapes, leaving us to find our way out, as best as we can. A single sentence may contain half-a-dozen distinct points

Adhikaraga-kunoikā (S. M). THE WORKS OF APPAYYA DIKSITA.

The following list is based primarily on an article on Appayya Dikaita in the Siddhanta Dipika (Vol. IV). The writer of that article would seem to have drawn principally from Aufrecht's Catalogus Catalagorum and Bhattaśri Bālasaraswati Pandit Nārāyana Sudarana's introduction to the Advaita-manjari edition of the "Siddhunta-lesa-saugraha". These sources have also been consulted in the preparation of the present list. Prof. P. S. Sastri of the Presidency College, Madras, has prepared a list mainly based on the manuscripts mentioned in the Descriptive and Triennial Catalogues of the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras; he has also made use of the information available from the Tanjore Palace Library. Mr. Y. Mahālinga Sāstrī, Advocate, Mylapore, a lineal descendant of Appayya Dikita has made out a list from material that was in the possession of his great-grand-father, Brahmaści Rāju Sāstrin. These two lists have also been availed of. Many of the works here enumerated find mention in all the lists, while some are mentioned in only one or other of the lists. The initials given after the name of each work indicate briefly the authorities relied on in each case. Thus, A is Aufrecht, M is Mahālinga Sāstrī, N is Nārāyaņa Sudaršana, S is P. P. S. Sastrī, and SD is the Siddhanta Dīpikā. wrongly listed by some of these are also mentioned, together with a note indicating the error actual or probable. THE SYSTEM OF SRIKANTHA.

Schlantha, like the Saiva Siddhantin, believes in three principles—Pati (the Lord), Pasu (the bound soul), and Pasa (the bonds). The impurity of the bound soul is beginningless, like the presence of verdigris in copper. The impurity can be got rid of only by getting the souls to engage in action and enjoy the fruit. The creation of the world is for this purpose. The Lord has no object of His own to gain by creating the world; He does it, however, in the interest of the bound souls, in order to purify and to redeem them.

The Lord is both the material and the efficient cause of the The world is, thus, the result of a transformation of Brahman, But transformation would imply change, that is, defect, in Brahman. Hence, Brahman's parinama (transformation) has to be understood as holding only of His Cit-Sakti (Intelligence-Energy). This Cit-Sakti is the material cause, which takes on the form of the worlds, Intelligent and Non-intelligent1. Brahman Himself (whom Srikantha identifies with Siva) is the efficient cause. But these are distinguishable aspects of Brahman, not different entities; for, between Energy and the possessor thereof, there is non-difference. Because of the relationship to the Lord, through Cit-Sakti, the world partakes of the Existence, Intelligence and Bliss of the Lord. The existence of particular things is a fraction of the existence of Brahman; individual knowledge and bliss are fragments of the Knowledge and Bliss of Siva. All this is taught by the Vedanta.

^{1.} The first manifestation of Cit-Sakti is Nārāyaņa, who is thus the material cause of the world. He is of the form of the universe (Viśvākāra).

The Vedanta also appears to teach identity of Brahman and the finite self. This, however, is not to be taken literally. The identity is only of the kind that subsists between the body and the embodied, the pervader and what is pervaded. When the faggot is pervaded by fire, we speak of it as itself fire.

Release comes through meditation on the Lord, after the acquisition of the necessary preliminaries of tranquility, faith, non-attachment to fruit whether in this world or the next, and so on. The meditation should take on any one of the forms prescribed by Upaniadic seers. The Lord may for instance, be contemplated as the small ākāśa within the heart or as the One Existence that evolved into all this. In all cases, the distinctive qualities of Siva will have to be understood, such as blissfulness, freedom from sin etc., and blue-throatedness, companionship of Umā and so on; for, the Lord is the abode of all auspicious qualities, and the texts, which make Him out to be attributeless, intend to deny only objectionable qualities.

In meditation, the Lord is to be thought of as the Self, for, so have contemplated sages of yore, saying, "I am, verily, Thou, O Lord, O Divinity; Thou, verily, art I". Release is the abandonment of the condition of bondage (Pasutva) and the attainment of the state of bliss (Sivatva). This cannot come about until the bonds are destroyed in the torrent of continuous meditation of identity with the Supreme. It is this identity that ancient seers have taught their disciples through texts like "That Thou art".

As the fruit of meditation, properly performed, one goes up to Brahman, after death, along the path of the gods. For those, who go along this path, there is no return. Some say, however, that there is no need for all to travel along this path, since for the devotees of the Non-related (presumably what the pure-non-dualist calls Nirguna Brahman), there is attainment of release even here, i.e., with release from the physical body. This exception in favour of the devotees of the Non-related (niranwaya-upasakas) is made by Srkantha, as often as there is occasion to talk of the path of the gods, for the others. Such statements naturally give rise to speculations as to whether Srikantha's system is really qualified-non-dualism (Visiatadvaita), though he chooses to call it so. And once the question is raised, there appear to be a number of indications which all tend to point to pure-non-dualism (Suddhādvaita) as his ultimate doctrine. All these indications have been examined and exploited fully by Appayya Dikeita in his 'Ananda Lahari,' as also in the present work. Though the 'Sivadvaita Nirpaya' contains no explicit reference to the other work, yet there seems to be no doubt that it is the later of the two. While a number of passages—such as the discussion of Apastamba's exaltation of the house-holder's state, Samkara's conception of release as the attainment of the nature of Isyara, and so on are common to both works (in words, as well as in thought), there are certain elaborations of the argument, in the 'Nirpaya,' which would definitely make it out to be later. Further,

^{1.} Or, possibly, "even white in this life". Srikantha does recognise, in a half-hearted way, the possibility of jivanmukti, release while still in the world; this recognition constitutes one more breach between his system and qualified-non-dualism. See B. M. III, 4,50.

^{2.} One or two of these may be noted here: (a) in the discussion of the view that the identity of the jiva and Brahman is referring to an argument about ākāda, in the sense of Cit-Sakti, being identical with Brahman, in his 'Ratna-traya-parīkeā,' Appayya makes mention of the 'Sivārkamanidīpikā' and the 'Sivā-nanda Laharī' (what we know as the 'Ānanda Laharī') but not to 'Sivādvaita Nirnaya,' though the argument is common to this work also, which, thus, seems to be later even than the 'Ratna-traya-parīkeā.' We shall next proceed to study Appayya's arguments in brief, for, a detailed consideration will easily become longer than the book itself.

and the true title over the girl, but all places to the larger. Since the completions but imagined, the "Nirnaya' sets out both the view and the criticism in greater detail than the 'Lahari'; (b) Saguna Brahman is shown in the 'Nirnaya' to be not merely the avantara tatparya of Vedanta texts, but the indispensable pre-supposition of the synthesis of such texts as relate to Nirguna Brahman; (c) the consideration of Apastamba's criticism of Samuyasa is fuller, further reasons being given for treating this as but arthavada; there is also a reference to similar condemnation by Krana and some ancient sages; (d) there is an attempt to show, with reference to the Suvarcala-Svetaketu discourse in the Mahabharata, that vivartavada is acceptable to Badarayana; (e) the arguments in support of the final position of the 'Lahari' figure here also, but certain objections thereto are stated and met.

APPAYYA'S ARGUMENTS.

The starting point of the discussion, as we have already noted, is the statement about niranvayopāsakas, a statement which is made not in one place but in three—III, 3, 32; IV, 2, 13; IV, The expression "niranvaya" is far from clear; it means "non-related", presumably non-related to the universe, what Appayya Diksita understands by the repeated use of the word "nis-prapanca". It seems to refer to Nirguna Brahman, as conceived by the advaitin, it being well-known that he postulates the attaiment of release even in this life, and certainly at death, without travelling along any path or tarrying anywhere. Srikantina, in such statements, apparently recognises the existence and validity of the concept of Nirguna Brahman. The reason for his referring to it only casually is not that he attaches no value to it, but that his purpose for the moment is the creation of faith in and devotion to Saguna Brahman; for, such devotion is a necessary propaedeutic to the attainment of the mental steadiness and concentration needed for the uninterrupted contemplation of Nirguas Brahman. The object he has primarily in view can be secured best by emphasising the Saguna aspect and concealing (nay, even condemning) the Nirguna aspect, though the latter be known to be the final truth, The procedure is paralleled by the condemnation of Samnyasa by the very sages who recognise it as an exalted order of life and extol it elsewhere. These are not moved by ignorance or error, but by the desire to save those of dull-wit who may take to the higher path of renunciation, having heard of the glories thereof, without having first acquired the requisite degree of firmness. Srikantha's procedure in suppressing and condemning the Nirguna significance is similarly motived. But since the truth may not be wholly concealed, it is partially indicated in these statements of Srikantha, which occur wherever there is occasion to mention departure along the path of the gods.

It will be seen that Appayya's interpretation is conceived in the dominant spirit of Hindu philosophy and founded on the notion of adhikara bheda (differences of competency). The difficulty of such a such notion, error is a degree of truth. theory, (as realised by Bradley and others of his mode of thought) lies in the element of positive opposition to truth. Error claims to be the whole truth, not merely a degree of it, and opposes the recognition of the higher truth. The partiality of the part is intelligible; but its opposition to completion and its claim to be complete, these seem hard to reconcile with the coherence-notion of truth and with absolutist metaphysics. The analogy of Apastamba's condemnation of Samnyasa applies just to this positive aspect of error; the sage is not merely praising the house-holder's state of life, (which is a partial good), but is setting it up as the only good order, even running counter to Sruti. This, savs Appayya, is for the purpose of securing undisturbed concentration on the grade of truth for which the subject is fit. When perfection in that stage is attained, the higher truth will dawn of itself. On such a hypothesis, one is led to speculate on the influence of the horrors of the Inquisition in the development of the Copernican theory. The cases would, of course, not be parallel, since the Inquisitors, to the best of our knowledge, were ignorant of the higher truth, and in this respect were unlike Apastamba or possibly Srikantha. There would thus seem to be a difference between the opposition set up by the lower grade of truth, and the opposition set up for it by those cognisant of the higher truth.

Nor may it be thought that the words "some say", with which the remark about niranvayopāsakas is introduced in every case, clearly shows that opinion not to be Srikantha's own; for, elsewhere, Srikantha introduces an opinion acceptable to himself, with the words "some say". This is in connection with the view that the Self of Bliss of the Taittiriyopanisad is Cit-Sakti, and Brahman there spoken of as the tail, the support, is the Supreme Brahman; though mentioned as a secondary view, this is really what is acceptable to him, as seen from his commentary on Sūtra I, 1, 2. The statement about non-departure for niranvayopāsakas should therefore be taken to be Srikantha's own opinion; this view is further re-inforced by his apparently supporting that position in his own person, in the commentary on III, 8, 32, where he says that therein is no inconsistency.

The latter is defensible, not the former. This is probably the reason why Appayya himself loses temper with the self-styled Vaimavas, though he considers Vinu to be an element of godhead, one of the three gems, the worship of whom leads to that shining glory, which is the abode of the Immortal.

1. A modern translator of Srikantha's Bhasya into Tamil doubts the genuineness of these passages and therefore jettisons them wholesale. The wisdom of the procedure is, however, doubtful; for, difficulties of reconciliation can at best lead to suspicion of their genuineness, not to proof of forgery. It is worth nothing that besides the Manuscripts and traditions of Appayya's time, about ten Manuscripts from different parts of India have been consulted in bringing out two of the printed editions of Srikantha's Bhasya—that of the Pandit (1872), and that of the Government of Mysore. It is difficult to discard as spurious statements which evidently have such strong support. See.

The next point of considerable importance is the mode of meditation prescribed by Srikantha. The Lord is to be meditated on as identical with the self, not as standing thereto in the relation of the embodied to the body. The latter relationship expresses the Visistadvaitin's manner of understanding Scriptural declarations of non-difference; and at one stage of his exposition Srikantha too leans to the same view. But this relationship is intended to appeal only to those who betake themselves to the path of service (daea marga), look upon the Lord as a Master in relation to servants, and can rise to no higher conception. For these, release comes about only very much later, after they have passed through the stage of servitude to Siva. Those who desire release itself and are fit to seek it at least through Saguna meditation, as on the ākāśa within the heart and so on, should contemplate Siva as identical with themselves.

The very text of the Jābālas quoted by Srīkantha supports this view; for, it asserts identity both ways: "I am Thou, and Thou art I". The Viśiṣṭādvaitin too quotes this text, but without realising its implications. If, as he says, the finite self is an attribute of the Lord, the Lord may be said to be the finite self, not vice versu; for, the substantive may be identical with the adjective, but not the adjective with the substantive. The latter is more than any one attribute or aggregate of attributes. The Sruti declaration "I am Thou" becomes, in this case, meaningless. The text, "That Thou art", also teaches real identity, for, we are told that sages realise Siva to be identical with their own Self and pass on this realisation to their pupils through texts like "That Thou art". This latter interpretation must be taken to negative the earlier interpretation even of "Tat tvam asi" in II, 3, 42, et seq.; for, the two are contradictory and contradictories cannot both be accepted, as Srlkantha says in his commentary on II, 1, 22. Even the Saguna upīsaka has thus to contemplate the Lord as identical with himself; hence Srīkantha's doctrine of non-difference is more akin to Suddhādvaita than to Višintādvaita.

The non-difference so indicated is confirmed on an examination of the relation-ship between Brahman and the universe. Cit-Sakti is of the form of the universe and Brahman is of the form of Cit-Sakti; hence, the universe is non-different from Brahman. But the advaitin maintains the Non-intelligent universe to be an illusory manifestation. True, says Appayya, and Srikantha is bound to entertain the same view; for, how can Cit-Sakti which is Intelligence evolve into what is Non-intelligent? Evolution must be understood literally in the case of the Intelligent universe, and figuratively in the case of the Non-intelligent. The latter being thus fictitious, there is no difficulty in comprehending the perfect identity between Brahman and the jiva which has thus been rid of its limiting conditions. Nor can it be said that the Intelligent world may be similarly fictitious, that too being an evolute of Cit-Sakti, as in that case, there will be none to experience release. Further, there is no need to declare it fictitious, for it is not subject to inodifications like the material world. In the latter case, real identity has to be denied, as otherwise Brahman would be subject to change; but in the former case, the jiva is eternal and from its identity with Brahman, no evil consequence may be fore-seen.

This argument which establishes the non-difference of Brahman and the universe, through Cit-Sakti, is liable to attack at two points. Non-difference may be denied as between Brahman and cannot be attempted, for the existence of existents like pot, cloth, etc., is said to be part of a larger, non-variable Existence, while individual bliss is a fragment of a larger Bliss. This more universal Existence and Bliss, if it is not Brahman, is at least Cit-Sakti. But for participation in some such universal Bliss, the gradations of Bliss mentioned in the Ananda Valli would be unintelligible; for, each grade would be, otherwise, distinct from the rest, and there would be no sense in saying that the sage "untormented by desires" partakes of each grade. Nor could Cit-Sakti, which is the Bliss of Brahman, make others happy, if it were different from them, for one man's bliss cannot as such cause the happiness of another.

Nor is the attempt to make out Brahman to be different from Cit-Sakti any more successful. Their non-difference is repeatedly declared in Srikantha's commentary, as when he says that the Supreme ākāśa (not the elemental ether) is the cause of the world, because it is non-different from Brahman or that both Brahman and His Cit-Sakti are to be meditated on in the Dahara Vidyā.

That Srikantha looks upon Brahman as in Himself unchanging is evident from his novel doctrine of transformation (apurya parinama), a transformation through Cit-Sakti, which leaves Brahman unaffected. It is also seen from his making out that Brahman in so far as He is distinguished from Cit-Sakti is only the operative cause.

Nor have we to depend only on our inference for the view that for Srikantha the Non-intelligent world is illusory. The difference between that and the Intelligent world is stressed by himself in his commentary on II, 1, 23, where he shows that while even the Intelligent world is designated as other than Brahman, the Non-intelligent world, which has no kinship with Brahman, cannot claim to be non-different from Brahman.

It will also be noticed that the sutras which seem to establish difference between Brahman and the finite self, (such as that about deep sleep and departure—I, 3, 43) seek to prove only that Brahman in his omniscience is superior to the finite self, as such, in his little-knowingness. No doctrine of utter difference is propounded here.

The advaitin, for his part, does not insist solely on the illusoriness of the universe. To a certain stage and for certain purposes, he is prepared to admit that the universe evolves from Brahman. This doctrine of evolution (parinama vada) is, indeed, helpful to him in establishing his illusion-doctrine; the former is the first step on which one rises to the latter, as the second. Srikantha's advocacy of parinama vada is not, therefore, inconsistent with his holding to vivarta vada, as the final truth.

Further, Samkara himself has shown that the Vedanta Sūtras are capable of being interpreted as referring to Saguna Brahman. Very few of the sūtras, as a matter of fact, teach the Nirguna doctrine. Even in establishing this, Samkara has to make use of Brahman's attributes, that being the only way to show that the Vedanta texts do not refer to the Non-intelligent pradhana or to the finite self. He has also given an indication, in his commentary on I, 1, 8, that the sūtras in their entirety may be made to bear a Saguna significance.

There is also another reason why Samkara has to make use of the concept of Isvara. Until the final redemption of all, release can take the form only of the attainment of the nature of Isvara, not of merger in Brahman. That this is Samkara's conception of release is evident from numerous passages in his commentary. Thus, while Srikantha's notion of creation as parinama is not opposed to Samkara's vivarta vada, there is some didentity in respect of their notions of release.

It is also evident from numerous indications that, for Samskara, Saguna Brahman is Siva, a Being other than Vienu or Samhara Rudra, the lord of destruction. One such indication is the frequent use of the term Paramesvara which generally denotes Siva; another is the comparison of Brahman's presence in the body to Hari's presence in the salagrama stone. The subject and object of a comparison cannot be identical; hence, Saguna Brahman (who is spoken of there) must be other than Hari. But such indications are extremely subtle and cannot appeal to the hearts or heads of devotees. Hence it is that what has been concisely indicated and provided for by Samkara is elaborated by Srīkantha Sivācaryā in his Sivādvaita.

EXAMINATION OF APPAYYA'S ARGUMENTS.

one who is not a confirmed Visits advaitin, and is almost convincing. Perhaps, the strongest of the points is that about the identity of the universe with Brahman, through Cit-Sakti. The philosophical problem of the One and the many, the permanent and the changing is sought to be solved by the introduction of a third factor, which is one-and-many, permanent-yet-changing, viz., Cit-Sakti. If this is not a mere name, we are entitled to examine the concept closely to discover how, if at all, it can be intelligible. The only possibility of taking it as intelligible lies, according to Appayya, in treating the Non-intelligent world as an illusory manifestation, not as an evolute of the same grade of reality as the alleged cause. If this central position is once conceded, the rest of Appayya's argument and his conclusion may well be admitted.

Now, what the inherent logic of an argument demands is not always realised by those who urge the argument. Srikantha's position may logically culminate in vivarta vada; but this of itself is no proof of his awareness or acceptance of the culmination. Appayya seeks to build on a statement in the commentary on II, 1, 28 (the asmadivacca sutra). The statement in question, runs thus: "thus, even of the Intelligent, there is non-appropriateness of the being of Isvara, because of their difference in respect of excess of attributes; what then of the Non-intelligent, which is essentially of a different character? This is the sense."

Now it is not Appayya's case that stones etc., are different from Brahman in the same way in which Intelligent beings are. Nor would he admit that the difference between the two is one of degree. And yet in the absence of community of nature, to some extent, the comparison of the two is unintelligible. hypothesis that both are of the form of Cit-Sakti (which is nondifferent from Brahman), this difficulty does not arise, but the original difficulty continues. Further, there is no point in the comparison at all, except on the basis of the difference of the finite self from Brahman. Comparison with the finite self is resorted to, as if the finite self were an intermediate link between the Non-intelligent world and Brahman. If that link proves to be not other than Brahman, it can be no link at all and the object of the comparison is frustrated. There is no such difficulty in taking the sutras, as they stand. The jiva, they seem to say, is different from Brahman, and the material world is still more different. The former conclusion is based on the latter, which requires no proof beyond the bare statement. What Srikantha is driving at in his commentary is the view that the Supreme Being is other and higher than the world of both Intelligent and Nonintelligent beings. It cannot, therefore, be said on the strength of the commentary on II, 1, 28, that Srikantha is prepared to view the Non-intelligent world as vivarta.

The explanation of the sutras which teach difference between the finite self and Brahman is also very thin. It is said that I, 3, 43, teaches not absolute difference between the two, but a difference of degree in respect of their knowledge, Brahman being omniscient and the jiva little-knowing. But then the Visistadvaitin does not maintain absolute difference between the two. He supports identity of a sort, as between body and the embodied, pervader and what is pervaded. He too speaks of the expansion and contraction of the intellect of the finite self, implying the difference in knowledge to be a difference of degree. It may well be that, in the last resort, such conceptions are unintelligible, except as synthesised in a theory of pure-non-dualism. To say, this, however, is not to admit that Srikantha recognised the need for or the possibility of such a synthesis.

It would, indeed, appear from his treatment of the finite self as atomic that he was far from conceiving of a synthesis of the kind. He maintains the doctrine of anutva (atomicity) of the jiva, (B. M. II, 3, 20-26), adopting in this the same view as the Vairnava Visistadvaita, and departing strangely enough from the conclusions of the Saiva Siddhanta. And it is still more strange that in Appayya's extensive analysis of Srikantha's Bhaeya, this doctrine alone has come in for neither mention nor comment. It may be that the dasa marga requires the text "That Thou art" to be interpreted on the basis of master and servant. Does it also require that the servant should be considered atomic? If so, the point is at least worth the trouble of statement and support. And one is all the more surprised at seeing no support for the atomic view from Agamas like the Kāmika which recognise the dasa marga (as evidenced by Appayya's own quotation therefrom in the present work). This much at least seems certain that there is a very real difference in Srikantha's system between Brahman and The difference is as great as that between the apu and the ilva.

^{1.} For the Siddhantin's criticism of the doctrine of atomicity of the finite self, see 'Sivajaana Siddhiar,' IV, 2, and Umapati's 'Pauakara Bhanya' pp. 274, 275. The latter says that the texts about departure etc., (whereon the view of atomicity is based) refer to the puryanaka,—the subtle body composed of the internal organs and the subtle elements.

the vibhu. To say that it is a difference of degree cannot serve to explain it away. And the difficulty is all the more significant, if we remember that the Visinadvaitin is always prepared to admit some community of nature of between the two.

It is said that though the text "That Thou art" is mentioned in introducing the sūtra I, 8, 48 (about deep sleep and departure), no dualistic interpretation is offered of it in the commentary on that sūtra. But no dualistic interpretation is necessary for the purpose of that sūtra. A doubt is created by such texts at "That Thou art" as to the identity of Brahman and the jīva. That doubt is set at rest by appeal to other texts which make clear the difference between this self and another Self which mounts it, embraces it and so on. The difference between the two selves being thus established, a dualistic interpretation of the other text does not become necessary, though it may not be inappropriate. The need, such as it is, is certainly met later by the interpretation given in the améa section (II, 8, 42, et seq).

If now, we turn to Srikantha's conception of release, we do not find Appayya's case any stronger. We may, for our purpose, admit that the passages about niranvaya-upāsakās are genuine; even then, they would seem to admit of being interpreted otherwise than as referring to knowers of Nirguna Brahman. Before considering this aspect of the question, however, it will be interesting to examine Appayya's exposition of the similarity between Samkara and Srikantha as to the concept of release and the kind of meditation necessary therefor. It is contended that for Samkara too, release is but the attainment of the nature of Isvara, until final release comes about for all. This argument is developed with some elaboration and with reference to various statements made by Samkara throughout his Bhāsya. Admitting the conclusion to be correct, one has still to remember that his conception is not identical with that of Srikantha; for, as Appayya himself points out in his 'Siddhanta-lesa-samgraha' (pp. 450-451), Isvaratva attained by meditation on Saguna Brahman is not the same as Isvaratva attained through knowledge of Nirguna Brahman, as preliminary to the final release of all. In the latter case, there is intuition of the One, Impartible Being that is Brahman, not in the former. Saguna Vidya (in the sense of meditation) does not bring about the final destruction of ignorance or egoity; and as is but natural in the circumstances, equality with the Lord extends not to all aspects. In respect of creatorship etc., of the worlds, the souls released by Saguna Vidya are not equal to the Lord. No such limitations are known to release through Nirgupa Vidya. It is not evident from any indication given by Srkantha that he contemplated release in this sonse, involving absolute equality with the Lord, without any reservations. His released souls can create not worlds, but only such objects as they desire for their enjoyment and bliss. It is evident, then, that there is a difference of considerable significance between the Sivadvaitin's conception of release and that of the advaitin. Nor is the difference one merely of degree; the difference of degree is so great that it involves a difference of kind, the difference between the wisdom of the fully released soul and the ignorance of the partially released and all but constraints. I he difficulty, such as it is, is due to luos

In elaborating the advaitin's conception of release, however, Appayya seeks primarily to show not the identity of that concept with that which is the goal if Sagupa Vidyā, but the necessity for the advaitin to entertain and expound a concept of the Sagupa Brahman. Our author cannot, therefore, be suspected of suppressing the truth or basing an argument on an insufficient analogy. But it must be said that if he had developed the contrast between the Saguna and Nirguna conceptions of release, in the present work, as in the 'Siddhanta-leśa-samgraha,' his other arguments in favour of his general position about Srkantha would have lost some part of their weight.

As for the mode of meditation, there can be no doubt that Srikantha's words are clear and emphatic on the need for contemplating the Lord as identical with the self. Appayya's interpretation is eminently sound, while his refutation of the Ramanuilyas, who seek to bolster up their śarīra-śariri-bhava, with the Jabala text, is brilliant. The dual statement with the change in the forms of the subject and the corresponding predicate (I am Thou, Thot art I) is unintelligible, except on the basis of full identity. But it may still be contended that the identity between Brahman and the jiva is only imagined for the purpose of contemplation. And it is in meeting this suggestion that Appayya's case appears comparatively weak. He points out truly enough that the consciousness of identity what Srikantha calls "perfect-self-consciousness."- persists in release, even when the soul goes about singing as he pleases, "I am the food, I am the food, I am the food, I am the eater of the food, etc.' The world, it is said, is realised as of one texture with Brahman, not as the body of Brahman. Such arguments, it must be confessed, are very interesting and all but conclusive. The difficulty, such as it is, is due to the fact that even an imagined identity is fruitful of certain results, and there seems to be no means of asserting that the very results. contemplated may not follow therefrom.

The example usually given of imagined identity is the Garuda, bhavana, wherein the magician by contemplation of Garuda, acquires the distinctive property of Garuda, viz., nullifying the effect of snake-poison. In so far as there is this practical success, the identification, though imagined, must be taken to have been complete. May not the imagined identity of the jiva and Brahman have similar practical results? It seems mere dogmatism to deny the possibility of any practical results or of such results as the perception of the world as of one texture with Brahman; for, he who makes the assertion about such matters must claim something of omniscience. But it may be contended that the magician never becomes Garuda, the object of his contemplation, while in contemplation of Brahman, the object is to become Brahman. Such a contention would be irrelevant; for, the Saguna-Brahmavadin looks forward to the attainment of Isvaratva, not to becoming Isvara; and the magician certainly attains Garudatva. It is true he does not become the bird Garuda, but the bird is not He medidates on the presiding deity of what he contemplates. the bird, and in so far as he succeeds in nullifying the effect of snake-poison, there is no reason to suppose that he does not become the deity. 1 The jiva may be only a part (améa), may be external to the Lord, as it were, and yet through contemplation of imagined identity may acquire release, and the powers of the Lord in respect of wisdom and enjoyment. The identity is but partial, but that may well serve for the perfection aimed at, which with Brahman, not or the boin or Brahman, it con is also partial.

In saying all this, one need not hold the notion of imagined identity to be intelligible in itself. One may indeed go further and say that identity is capable of being imagined in part only because of the perfect identity of the self with all that is, i.e. with Brahman. To say that the identity contemplated is not between the magician and a bird, but between him and a deity is not to solve the problem, but to make it more mysterious. We do know he does not become the bird, but we do not know and cannot say whether he has or has not become the deity, for, we know little of the deity. There is also the difficulty that while the Saiva Siddhanta notion of the self will permit of such imaginary identification, Srikantha's conception offers many difficulties. According to the former, the soul in itself is pervasive, not atomic. It is also sat-asat capable of identifying itself either with the Lord who is sat or with the material universe which is asat, according as one or the other is contemplated. For Srikantha the soul is atomic; and so far as we know, any such notion as satasat would have been scouted by him as self-contradictory and unintelligible. That he took those attributes to be contradictory is evident from what he says in the commentary on II, 2, 31 (in discussing Jainism). what he confempinted

It must, however, be confessed that while all this reasoning and much more may have been self-evident to Appayya, there is not sufficient indication to impute the same knowledge to Srikantha. Except as culminating in pure-non-dualism, Sivādvaita may be riddled with inconsistencies, but this of itself is no proof that Srikantha was either aware of or desired that culmination.

Again, though by released souls, the world is perceived as one with Brahman, not as the body of Brahman, it must be remembered that the very same passage (from the commentary on the vikārāvarti sūtra) goes on to speak of Brahman as the harmony of Siva and Sakti; and as Sakti is spoken of as the seat of Siva, the body of Siva and so on, all reference to the notion of a body cannot be taken to have been excluded. Further, the intelligence of Brahman and the released souls is said to be such as perceives diversity in the universe. In commenting on the Taittiriya text (II, 1)

"He enjoys all desires along with Brahman, the vipascit", Srikantha explains "vipascit" to mean "he, whose intelligence perceives diverse kinds of things" (Commentary on III, 2, 16). The commentator thus seems to postulate a richness and a diversity in the intelligence of Brahman and the released souls, a diversity alien to the contemplation or the realisation of him who knows Nirguna Brahman.

As for the statements about niranvaya-upāsakas, the very word "upāsaka" would seem to be a stumbling-block to Appayya's interpretation. The word vidyā signifies either knowledge or meditation, according to the context. No such variable meaning seems to attach to upāsanā. The Non-related (niranvaya) too would seem to be an object of meditation. Hence, one would be justified in seeking to understand that term in some sense other than Nirguṇa Brahman. And such a reference seems not impossible to trace, especially, if we turn to the Āgamas for guidance.

The Sarva-jnanottara Āgama, is, as its name implies, the culmination of all wisdom. The doctrine expounded herein is taught by Siva not to other sages, as in the rest of the Āgamas, but to his own son, Subrahmanya; this is taken to be a mark of the higher grade of the wisdom inculcated. Unlike the main body of Saiva doctrine, it distinguishes four principles instead of three, Siva the fourth being other than Pati (the Lord), Pasu (the bound soul) and Pasa (the bonds). Pati is the Lord who engages in the five-fold activity of creation, sustentation, destruction, concealment and the bestowal of grace, in relation to the world. Siva is unconnected with the world. In the language of advaita, Pati is Saguna Brahman or Īśvara, while Siva is nigprapañca Brahman. The description of Siva approximates to that of Nirguna Brahman, for, He is said to be stainless, (niranjanah, niramayah), free from colour (class?) and form (varna rupa vivarjitah) and so on. But He is not to be identified with Nirguna Brahman, for, there is some positive characterisation too of Siva, as omniscient (sarvajārh), omnipresent (sarvagah), peaceful (śāntah), the Self of all (sarvātīnā) and so on. Thus, though He is higher than Pati, who is the Being that brings about creation and destruction (sṛṣṭi-saṃhāra-kārakah) and is otherwise known as Sadāśiva, He is not identical with the characterless Brahman of the advaitin. And the doctrine propounded cannot be identified with pure advaita either, for, so far as one can judge, this seems to be specifically mentioned and condemued. "Som e, with confused minds" it is said, "declare the doctrine of mere non-difference."

The meditation prescribed in this Agama is that of non-difference (advaita bhāvanā). "He who thinks 'I am the self; Siva, the Supreme Self is, verily, different' or he who, because of delusion, meditates thus does not attain Sivatva. Abandon the thought of difference, 'Siva is other than myself'; contemplate (them) always as not two, (but) in the form 'I alone am that which is Sivā". We have not, in this particular verse, a dual statement, as in the ^{1.} See verse 24 of the Tripadartha patala; and on the whole of this topic, see pp. 8 and 4 of Muthiah Pillai's edition of this Agama. Some of the negative characterisations are striking in their resemblance to the advaitin's conception of Nirguna Brahman. Siva is thus said to be above speech, thought and name (vān mano nāma varjitah) the knowledge that is devoid of characteristic marks (alingam), imperishable (akṣaram), above sense objects (viṣayātītam) unattainable (agocaram), indubitable (asamdehyam), and so on. See Sivānanyasātētkāra paṭala'.

Jābāla Šruti; but what is here said is identical with that part of the Jābāla statement—the part, "Lam, verily, Thou"—which is significant for pure-non dualism. Neither the Agamic nor the Vedānta statement is reconcilable with the conception of the finite and the Supreme Self being related as the body and the embodied.

The conception of Siva who is unrelated to the creation etc. of the world (speciambara-varjitah), who is to be attained by media tation of perfect identity, would thus seem to have been entertained by a non-advaitic system such as that propounded by the Sarva-inanottara. It may be that the claims of logical consistency. or metaphysical intelligibility do not allow one to rest for long in this half-way house, but force one on inevitably to pure non-dualism. But the traveller may be too tired to go on or may not even realise that his resting place is only a half-way house. In such a case, it is highly speculative to impute either a knowledge or the attainment of a higher goal. If Srikaptha is really responsible for the passages about niranyaya-unasakas, he need not have meant a reference to any others, except the devotees of Siva, as distinguished from Pati or Sadasiva. The devotees of the latter attain release through the path of the gods; the devotees of Siva, who is higher than Pati, must necessarily have some distinct fruit; since the attainment of release is common to both classes of devotees, the distinction can be only in respect of the path. Those who contemplate identity with Siva have no need to go along the path of the gods. Non does it require much thought to.

^{1.} Verses 12 and 13 of the Sivananya-saksatkara patala. The Tamil translation published by Mr. P. Muthiah Pillai declares the non-difference from the aspects of both Siva and the self: "South in the self: Siva alone is myself, I alone am Siva"; see p. 48 of his edition.

realise that Srikantha—the pupil of Svetācārya who taught the harmonious sense of the various Āgamas (nānāgama vidhāyin),—must have been familiar with an Āgama of such importance as the Sarvajāānottara,

But the suggestion has to face at least one difficulty with indifferent success. For him who knows Nirguna Brahman, it may be shown by the sheer weight of logic that departure is neither possible nor necessary; whereas, in the case of the devotee of Siva, recourse has to be had to conjectural arguments.1 We thus seem to be reduced to the necessity of choosing between two possibilities, neither of which has clear advantages over the other, in respect of consistency with the position expounded by Srikantha, while one of them, however, has the merit of being in itself more consistent logically. And Appayya has laboured, not without success, to show that this logical self-consistency does not demand failure to harmonise with positions like Srikantha's apparent Visistadvaita, that the latter is, indeed, the first step on which one rises to the former, as the second step. But when all this is admitted, one has yet to beware of confounding logical with actual perfection. The vision of the critic may be fuller and more perfect than that of the philosopher who propounded the system; and the fact that the latter has here and there made statements that may possibly bear a deeper significance is not adequate proof of that significance having been intended. Though, as Appayya shows, 'our author has introduced, at least in one place, a view acceptable to himself, with the words "Some say", it does not follow that in every case, the view so introduced is really, Srikantha's own: And though Appayya does not demand the latter of us, his arguments demand very little less. For, between the passage about the Self of Bliss being understood as Cit-Sakti, and the passages about 'niranvaya-upasakas' there is this signicant difference: while the identification of Cit-Sakti and the anandamaya self is explicitly affirmed in the commentary on I, 1, 2, there is no such affirmation in the present case. We have indications scattered throughout the exposition without a doubt, but scattered in such a fashion that one realises their significance. only when they are strung together, as they are by Appayya, When, added to this, there is the explicit condemnation of Advaita along with Bhedabheda vada in the section II, 3, 42 et seq, it seems exceedingly improbable that Srikantha intended purenon-dualism as the culmination of his system. But it is also ewident that such a culmination may be worked up to with the materials derived almost entirely from Srikantha's exposition. To have exhibited this successfully is the great merit of Appayya's work.

^{1.} The Agamas do distinguish between release immediately on the dissolution of the physical body, and release which comes only at the close of all the enjoyment that has been earned. The former is the privilege of preceptors (ācāryas), and those purified by the ceremony of dīkṣā (dīkṣitas). See particularly 'Mokṣa Kārikā,' v. 117. It would thus appear that even on an Agamic basis, and without any thought of Nfrguṇa Brahman, one may speak of a mode of release, which does not involve departure on the path of the gods.

A brief mention has to be made of a school of thought which attempts to reverse the relation of Saguna and Nirguna Vidyas, as understood by Appayya. Devotion to Saguna Brahman, it is ordinarily thought, brings about mental purity, firmness, and the capacity to concentrate on Nirguna Brahman. Saguna Vidya is the preparation for Nirguna Vidya. According to the Saiva Siddhānta, however, Nirguna Vidyā is a preparation for Saguna Vidya. The outlook of the average man is materialistic. He identifies himself with the presentations and experiences of the external world; he wrongly imagines himself as enjoying and sorrowing. His knowledge at this stage is called pasa-jaana. When this stage is passed, and the Self is realised as free from these extraneous qualities, as different from Matter to which alone both enjoyment and suffering belong, we have the Nirguna Vidya, the Knowledge that the Self is above and other than what has the gunas (i.e., Matter). With this, however, we have but pasu-jana. which is not the goal of knowledge. Purusa (Spirit) is above and other than the twenty-four principles of Matter (Praktti tattva and subordinate tattvas). But above the Purusa there are other categories, and above them all, there is Siva. The advaitin does not recognise these categories nor the Supreme Being who is above them If the materialist erroneously identifies Spirit with Matter, the advaitin no less erroneously identifies it with himself, forgetting the possibility of higher truths and reaches of experience. Both views are partial, though the advaitin's view marks a distinct advance in the progress to truth. The materialist identifies Reality with what is seen, the advaitin identifies it with the seer, but above both and including both these is the revealer, but for whom neither would be, He who is neither subject nor object, but in whom subject and object live and move and have their being. This is Siva, the Supreme Being, the Resplendent Abode of all auspicious qualities, the ever-gracious, ever-merciful Lord, who engages in creation as a sport so that souls may be rid of their beginningless taint of impurity, through the accumulation of merit and demerit and the enjoyment thereof. This knowledge is the Saguna Vidya of the Siddhanta and the Agamanta, a knowledge which is not opposed to, but is rather the fulfilment of the Vedanta.

The view thus pressented is based on the triple distinction of the revealer, the seer, and what is seen (darsayitā, drk and drsya), a distinction at least as old as the Siva-jnāna-bodha (See sūtra XI). It obtains further support from the distinction between Vedas and Āgamas, (as general and special doctrine), a distinction known at least to Tirumālar, if not to earlier writers. This distinction of doctrine is analogous in some ways to that between the Old and the New Testament (as pointed out by Dr. V. V. Ramaņa Sāstrin). Umāpati, writing in the beginning of the 14th century, says that the Āgamas are for perfected souls, the Vedās for the rest; the distinction is thus allied to that between 'pakva' and 'apakva adhikāra.' These suggestions which exhibit the Siddhānta as a fulfilment of the Advaita Vedānta, have been specially stressed by some present-day writers.

Attractive as such a hypothesis is, to the theist, it has to face insuperable difficulties. For one thing, the Nirguna Brahma-Vädin declares the world to be illusory. In passing beyond that stage of knowledge, it is not conceivable that we shall arrive at a stage of knowledge, where the world ceases to be illusory. The perceiving self may possibly be declared to be also illusory from a higher point of view, but from no higher point of view can the partial or defective cease to be as such partial or defective. If the Siddhanta is a fulfilment of the Advaita Vedanta, we may expect to find in the former the doctrine of the illusoriness of the world; but we do not find any such doctrine. The world, it is true, is said to be an evolute not of Cit-Sakti, but of māyā-sakti, but māyā does not mean illusion for the siddhāntin, as it does for the advaitin; and though, in release, the world as such counts for nothing, it can hardly be said to be nothing.

1. See, in particular, Sentinathier, 'Mahā Ugra Virabhadrāstram,' and Ambalava Nāvala Parāsakti, Introduction to his edition of Umāpati's 'Pauskara Bhāsya;' also Schomerus, pp. 322-325, 332, 387. The first of these errs egregiously in claiming Appayya as an adherent of this school of thought, in the face of the plain drift of the Ānanda Lahari, the Sivādvaita Nirsaya and repeated statements in the Siva-tattvaviveka, the Sivārkamasidīpikā and so on, to the effect that reality ultimately is Nirgusa. Sentinathier makes short work of all such passages, declaring them to be interpolations, one and all; this method of escape, however, hardly commends itself to the conscientious student of any system.

Further, the advaitin maintains that in his concept of Nirguna Brahman, all distinctions are transcended. It is superior to the differences of the seer and the seen; it is itself seer and seen as also what reveals. It is, therefore, unjustifiable in the first place to identify that Brahman with the seer, the bare subject, and thereupon, in the second place, to seek to re-introduce distinctions already transcended. The attempt is due to a failure to comprehend the Nirguna Vidya. Agamanta, thus presented, would seem to fall short of the Advaita Vedanta, which appears to have a legitimate claim to be the fulfilment of the former.

- Bliss of Siva is of the form of the entire world, intelligent and non-intelligent, and is non-different therefrom.
- 2'823 The view of identity between Brahman and the jiva has been explicitly refuted in II, 3, 42 et seq.
- 3.1 Statement of the Siddhanta: Pure Non-dualism is
- 3.11 Support for the above from the aniyama section
 - 3.12 Further support from IV, 2, 8 et seq.
- 8 121 Preliminary view in that section—that for the enlightened one there is no departure. Texts about departure &c., relate to those knowers of Brahman, who seek liberation by degrees.
- 8 122 Refutation of that view: the attainment even of the ever-present Brahman can come about only by stages; nor is there any difficulty in respect of this going, since a subtle body continues to exist. The text 'na tasya prāṇā utkrāmanti' really means 'na tasmāt' etc.
- 3'1221 Objection: the ground of departure is the body, not the finite self, as implied in 'na tasmāt' etc.
- 8.1222 The finite self, not the body, is mentioned as related to prana; if a ground of departure has to be understood, the former is preferable. The interpretation is supported by the Madhyandina reading.
- know Brahman without attributes.
- 3:124 The text 'na tasya prāṇā' etc., is intended to state some special feature of the enlightened soul and is hence inconsistent with rising and departure from the body, which hold of the unenlightened.

Nor do principles of interpretation demand a different sense, the sense being determined by the upakrama, as in the story of Prajāpati's gift of

- 3.125 The Brhadāranyaka text IV, 4, 6, also supports this view. Attainment (apyeti) does not necessarily imply distinction, since it means identification like the word 'gamaya' in 'Tamaso mā jyotir gamaya' etc.
- 3.126 The Brhadaranyaka text IV, 4, 7 also supports this
- 8:127 The Mādhyandina text should be interpreted in the light of the Kāṇva, not vice versa; for, non-departure of the vital airs is made clear by the words "they remain even here", uttered in reply to Ārtābhāga's question.
 - 8.1271 Objection: Artabhaga's third question relates to the uncolightened one, as seen from his fourth and fifth questions.
- 3.1272 Reply: Mere proximity of questions relating to the avidvan cannot counter-act the clear indication of characteristic marks pertaining to the vidvan. Nor is there unity of context, as seen from the diversity and indirectness of the questions, which were designed to perplex and humble Yajñavalkya.
- 3.13 Support for the view of Pure Non-dualism from

- 3.131 The prima facie view of that section set out.
- 3.182 The conclusion of that section: the path of light etc., applies to all modes of meditation.
- 3'138 The paths described in the various vidyas are
- 3.134 The Saman verses lead up to Brahman, as accessories to meditation, not as constituting a path.
- 8.195 The text "by the very same rays he goes up not selected as (Ch., VIII, 6, 5)" does not exclude other stages of the path.
- 8.136 Nor does the tvarā vacana (Ch., VIII, 6, 5) exclude
 - 8.137 But the path of light is not for "niranvayopasakas".
- 3.188 Even views acceptable to the bhāsyakāra are introduced with the words "Some say" as in I, 1 13 et seq.
- 8 14 I, 1, 29 et seq accepts non-difference in meditation, between Brahman and the jlva.
- 3.15 IV, 1, 3 also establishes that non-difference.
- 8.151 Prima facie view in the above section.
 - 3.152 Final view.
- 8.153 The two-fold statement of the Jābāla Sruti that is cited here 'Tvam vā ahamasmi, aham vai tvamasi' cannot be justified except on the basis of identity.

 So also of the Aitareya text Yosau so'ham etc.

and filth questions.

- 8:154 Interpretation of Tat tvam asi compatible only with identity, not the 'sarIra-sarIri-bhava.'
- 3'155 Nor is the non-difference barely imagined as seen from I, 1, 31; IV, 1, 3; and IV, 4, 19. The consciousness of identity persists even when the soul in release sings as he pleases ahamannam, aha-

3'16 The commentary on I, 4, 6 shows indirectly that non-difference is acceptable to the bhāgyakāra.

The Sāṃkhya cannot claim that Kaṭha, III, 15 declares of the unevolved that it is to be known, since that verse relates to Prājña as seen from Kaṭha, III, 18. But Prājña in Kaṭha, III, 18 declares to the jīva; and its citation would be inappropriate except on the basis of identity of the jīva and Parameśvara.

3.161 Objection: even on the hypothesis of identity there is a recognition of distinction of topics as relating to the finite or the Absolute. Hence, the reference to the jiva, in any case, is inappropriate.

about Brahman, when the question is about the difference of Brahman. There would be lack of congruity between question and answer, but for the non-difference of Brahman and the jiva.

8.1621 Objection: the question does not relate to the finite self, since Naciketas has already faith in its existence. Even on the basis of non-difference, the reply should not go beyond the terms of the question. In truth, the question relates to the released souls, that being the sense of preta.

3.1622 The difficulty about a question being barred by prior whose existence and nature Naciketas has knowledge, as seen from his question about the fires.

If partial knowledge alone be admitted, that may hold in the case of the mrta jiva too. The reply goes beyond the question on either interpretation of preta.

and the commentary on I, I, I rests on non-difference, and of the many apparent differences between the two, their identity is a matter for legitimate inquiry, but not to be disand vitable leredited and ed no neve moitoe de le superior de la surficion de

3:181-d Objection: Cit-Sakti is non-different even from the inert world, but Brahman is not non-different from the latter. Hence, non-difference from Cit-Sakti can establish not pure, but only qualified non-dualism. Further, Brahman's non-difference from Cit-Sakti is only figurative, the two being really different, as support and what is supported, abode and what abides, etc.

The latter is helpful to the doctrine of transformation.

The latter is helpful to the doctrine of illusion, as is seen from the Samkara, Bhasya and also the Samkapa SarIraka. Srikantha too makes judgments like 'san ghatah' rest on the reality not of the world, but of Brahman.

- 3.183 Further, the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Brahman is declared in many places, e.g., I, 1, 23; I, 3, 16; I, 2, 1; III, 3, 11—14.
- 8.1831 Prima facie view in III, 8, 14, that the sheaths of anna, prāņa etc., should in all cases be contemplated.
- 8'18'82 Refutation: their contemplation serves no purpose;
 they are mentioned only to indicate Brahman's superiority to all else.
- 3.1833 The sheaths of food etc., are not to the thought of as the cave wherein Brahman is present, because each of them is spoken of as a self; and no other self but Siva is to be contemplated for release.
- 3.18331 Objection: the exclusion enjoined in "abandoning all else" applies to Umā also, the expression "self" in the "Self of Bliss" being common to the selves of food etc., as well.
- 3.18382 Reply: the Self of Bliss is the Supreme Self, the expression being used in that sense elsewhere even in the Ananda Valli, in the statement "From the Self, ether originates."
- 3.18333 Further Objection: Cit-Sakti being identical with the entire world—cetana and acetana—, the other intelligent beings, like Brahmā etc., are also non-different from Brahman, and should be so contemplated.
- 8.18384 Reply: not so, since then the exclusion enjoined by Sruti would have no application at all, its logical reference being to such intelligent beings as are mentioned in the context, viz., Brahmä, Vianu, Rudra and Indra.

- 3.18335 Objection: the Self of Bliss is Siva, according to Srīkantha, not Cit-Sakti. Reply: that Self is Cit-Sakti, according to the second of the interpretations given; and that this is the one acceptable to him appears from I, I, 2. Further, the former identity being evident from the first chapter, there is no need to reiterate it in Chapter III.
- 3.1834 Non-difference of Cit-Sakti and Siva is established in I, 3, 12. Prima facie view that the world led up to by the Saman verses is Vienu-loka, and that the person seen is Vienu.
- 3.1835 Refutation of the prima faice view: between Vienu and Siva, there is a difference not of substance, but of state.
- 3.18351 Objection: the refutation goes beyond the doubt which is about the worlds of Vianu and Siva.

 Further, Vianu is directly identical not with Siva but with Cit-Sakti, being a mode thereof.
- 3.18352 Re-interpretation of the commentary: the "supreme abode of Viṣṇu" is Siva-Cit-Sakti, and it is the identity of this with Siva that is asserted.
- 3.18353 Another interpretation: expressions like "the supreme abode of Vianu etc.," refer to Siva, proceeding on the basis of non-difference between Vianu and Siva. Even thus, non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Siva is secured.
- 3·184 Cit-Sakti as non-different from Brahman recognised by the Samksepa Sarīraka and the Pancapādikā.
- 3.185 Justification of the treatment of them as different

- in the dahara vidyā, Gārgi Brāhmana etc., also of the statement in I, 1, 2 as to the Self of Bliss being figuratively spoken of as Brahman.
- 3.19 The above arguments indicate the conclusion that for Srīkaṇṭha, Brahman is nirguṇam, nīrupam, niṣprapañcam etc.
- 3.191 There is not in Śrikaṇṭha's system anything analogous to the Viśeṣa of the Madhvas; nor would such a principle help, for, if it did the work of Difference, it would be Difference itself, and Difference is unacceptable to Śrikaṇṭha.
 - 3.192 From non-difference follows the illusory nature of the non-intelligent world.
 - 8.1921 Nor is empirical difference irreconcilable with this doctrine of illusory manifestation.
 - 3.1922. Nor does it follow that the cetana-prapanca is also vivarta, as, then, there would be no experience of release.
 - 3.1928 The statement in section I, 4, 23 et seq that Cit-Sakti transforms itself into beings intelligent and non-intelligent signifies not that intelligent beings are not eternal, but that there is transformation for them in the way of contraction and expansion of knowledge and happiness.
 - 3.2 Reason for a fresh commentary though subscribing to pure non-dualism: intuition of the non-specific Brahman can be gained only through concentrated meditation; and concentration is gained by the Grace of God, through worship.
 - 3.21 Objection: inculcation of devotion and worship does not justify condemnation of the Supreme truth.

Reply: such condemnation is justifiable as seen from the procedure of sages like Apastamba.

- 3.211 Apastamba's condemnation of Samnyasa in the Kalpa Sutras.
- 3.212 Untenability of Apastamba's condemnation in the light of his own statements. Object of that condemnation is to secure dull-witted people in the practice of house-hold virtues, so that they may thereby acquire the strength of mind necessary for renunciation.
- 3.213 Similar condemnation inspired by a like purpose in Chapter XVIII of the Santi Parva.
 - 3 214 Condemnation of early renunciation in the Manu Smrti should be similary explained.
- 3.215 Srikantha's Saguna interpretation of Vedanta texts and the concealment of their Nirguna bearing are conceived in the like spirit. His interpretation has the merit of not going against the truth, but expounding an intermediate aspect of the final truth.
- 3.22 Objection: if Srīkaṇṭha acknowledged Nirguṇa Brahman, he should have recognised that alone to be the purport of the Sūtras, as shown by Saṃkara. Reply: Saṃkara himself has shown the existence of a reference in the Sūtras to Saguṇa Brahman, e.g., in sūtras 1, 2, 3, 4, 10 and 11 of Chapter I, pāda 1, and also in the introduction to to I, 1, 12: S. So also in the rest of the Sūtras, synthesis is exhibited of some with Nirguṇa and some others with Saguna Brahman.

- 3.23 Objection: if Samkara too has exhibited the Saguna bearing of the Sutras, where was the necessity for Srikantha's commentary? Reply: the fresh commentary goes further than Samkara's in determining the form and nature of Saguna Brahman.
- 3.231 Samkara himself gives clear indications of his own view that Saguna Brahman is Siva, a being other than Visnu (I, 3, 14: S);
- 3.232 Or Samhāra Rudra (III, 3, 32: S).
- 3.233 Vācaspati Miśra who knew what the Bhagavatpāda had at heart, identified Saguna Brahman with Siva, in his preliminary invocation.
- 3'234 All such indications are far too subtle for the average devotee. The specific nature of Saguna Brahman should be determined by examining and discounting references to deities other than Siva; this is what Srikantha does.
- Samkara's discussion of the Saguna interpretation to have been in vain. Reply: not so, for these implications had necessarily to be recognised in demonstrating that Sruti references were to Brahman, not to the finite self or pradhāna, and in exhibiting the nature of the fruit of Brahmank howledge. This fruit is the attainment of the nature of Tśvara i.e., Saguna Brahman.
- 3 2851 That Samkara holds release to be of the above nature, until the final liberation of all, is seen from I, 3, 19: S;

3.2353 II, 3, 43, et seq: 8;

3.2354 III, 2, 3: 5;

3.2356 Objection: if the enquiry into Saguna implications is necessarily involved in the other inquiry, why promise it, as it were, by framing the definition of Brahman in I, 1, 2: $\frac{1}{2}$, so as to apply to both forms? Reply: the object of the promissory statement is to show that there is a Saguna interpretation for the $\frac{1}{2}$utras, in their entirety. This is indicated clearly in I, 1, 3: $\frac{1}{2}$ alone, on the $\frac{1}{2}$that lipulāka nyāya, a principle followed by the author of the $Kalpataru in commenting on IV, 1, 16: $\frac{1}{2}$.

- 3.241 Objection: Śrīkaṇṭha for his Saguṇa interpretation relies not only on the Saguṇa contexts, but draws on Nirguṇa contexts also, making it appear that the Nirguṇa doctrine has no basis at all. Hence, his commentary is opposed to the doctrine of Nirguṇa Brahman.
- 3.242 Reply: even Samkara has to speak of Brahman's characteristic marks in establishing his doctrine of the characterless Brahman. The texts about the latter have an intermediate reference to the former.
- 3.2421 Objection: but Śrikantha twists even Nirguna texts with much effort, to suit his doctrines.
- 3.24211 Interpretations of the Vācārambhana Śruti—first

- 3.24212 The same--second interpretation.
- 3.24213 Doctrine of difference expounded in III, 2, 11 et seq, and also in I, 3, 44; II, 1, 22; and III, 4, 8.
- 3.24214 Declarations of non-difference are explained as referring to non-otherness, as between the pervaded.
- 3.24221 Explanation of the above as not inconsistent with pure non-dualism. II, 1, 22 implies that the bonds of agency etc., are illusory. II, 1, 22 only removes the erroneous notion engendered by II, 1, 15 that even the inert world is non-different from Brahman. 1, 3, 43 and 44 refer to the superiority of Brahman, not to His difference from the finite self.
- 3:24222 The interpretation set out in II, 3, 42 et seq favouring difference is negatived by the interpretation favouring non-difference in IV, 1, 3.
- 3.242221 Objection: such negation, being self-contradictory, is inconseivable. Non-difference must be only imagined for purposes of meditation.
 - 3.242222 Reply: the interpretation offered in II, 3, 42, et seq is opposed to the Jābāla Sruti cited in IV, 1, 3, to the drift of the commentary on IV, 1, 3, and to the commentary on III, 3, 14. Nor can both interpretations be accepted, they being contradictory.
 - 3.242223 Non-difference is not merely imagined; the exeperience thereof persists even in release, as shown by the commentary on IV, 4, 19.
 - 3.242224 Objection: the notion of the relationship of body and the embodied is of no value either in the knowledge of Nirguna Brahman or in meditation on Saguna Brahman. Why then should it have been propounded?

- 8.242225 Reply: that notion is for those of least capacity who are qualified only for the dasa marga.
- 3.24223 The interpretation of the Vācārambhana Sruti serves only to strengthen faith in Saguna Brahman. Further, the aśmādi sūtra (II, 1, 28) makes it clear that in the view of the commentator, the inert world is not non-different from Brahman, and that, consequently, it is to be understood as fictitiously imposed on Brahman.
- 4. Vivarta vāda is the view of the Sūtrakāra too, as seen from Suvarcalā—Švetaketu Upākhyāna in the Mokea Dharma Parva of the Mahābhārata.
 - 4.1 Support for the above view from another context in the Moksa Dharma and the Visnu Purana.
- 5 The qualified non-dualism of others is not susceptible of being interpreted as favourable to pure non-dualism. Srikantha alone has provided a commentary suitable to all three grades of capacity.

ŚIVĀDVAITA NIRNAYA

AUM

Srkantha Sivācārya has expounded the doctrine of Sivādvaita; we consider here whether it is qualified- or non-qualified- non-dualism that is there upheld. One is led to believe that the first position is what is accepted from the statements of qualified-non-dualism and so on in the ārambhaṇa (II, 1, 15, et seq) and other sections, and that the second position is what is accepted from statements like "for the devotees of the Non-related, there is release even here," in the commentary on the aniyama section (III, 3, 32). Both of these positions cannot claim to be considered final; hence

^{1.} The word "adhikarana" has been throughout renderedby its nearest eqivalent "section." An adhikarana comprises one or more sutras directed to the elucidation of a particular topic. It is divisible into five heads: the subject-matter, the doubt, the prima facie view, the refutation thereof and the final conclusion. This is the order in which they are enumerated by Srīkantha in his commentary on I, 1, 1. The Vedanta Sutras are cited throughout the present text and translation merely by numbers. When other works are quoted from, the name in full or in abbreviated form is always given along with the number of the page, verse, or sūtra. The ärambhana adhikarana is directed to showing the nonotherness of effect from cause, the world from Brahman, with special reference to the Sruti "Vācārambhanam vikāro nāmadheyam, mrttiketyeva satyam (Ch. VII, 1, 4)". Two interpretations of this text are offered by Srikantha. A discussion of them will be found later on, in the text.

one of these two must be determined to be conclusive. The present inquiry is undertaken for that purpose.

- This is what appears here at first sight. It is seen that wherever Sivādvaita is dealt with or referred to by the ācārya in his commentary on the Brahma Mīmāmsa, in all those places, (the position) is stated only as qualified non-dualism.
- 2.1 Thus, for instance, in the arambhana section (it is said): "We are not (among) those who maintain absolute difference between Brahman and the world, as between a jar and a cloth, that being opposed to the texts which declare their non-distinctness; and we are not (of) those who maintain their absolute non-difference, nor do we declare the illusoriness of one of them, as in the case of silver and mother-of-pearl, that being opposed to the texts which declare difference between their natural qualities. Nor are we (of) those who posit both difference and non-difference, that (relationship) being opposed to fact. We are, however, of those who maintain qualified-non-dualism, as exists between body and the embodied or between a quality and the qualified". So too (it is said) in the bhoktrapatti section (II, 1. 14): "what has been set out already as to Siva alone, without a second—the Self qualified by the universe both intelligent and non-intelligent-becoming both cause and effect, that constitutes (the doctrine of) the qualified-non-dualism of Siva."
- The position of pure non-dualism is refuted through the statement of objection and reply in the "Īkṣatyadhikaraṇa" (the section beginning with Īkṣaternāśabdam, I, 1, 5). "Now, from (the words) 'Existence alone this was in the beginning, one only without a second' and so on, it is understood that the substance which is (but) of the nature of existence is free from qualification, because of the exclusion (implied by alone in existence alone). How may that causal condition be said to be qualified by the universe in a subtle form?" Such is the statement of the objection. "By the exclusion (implied) in existence aline, what is excluded is not qualification, but the causality of what is non-existent; for, there is possibility of confusion as to the causality of the non-existent, because of the declaration, 'Nonexistence this was in the beginning; from that existence was born' (Taitt. II, 7). Further, how does Brahman's freedom from qualification result from (the text) 'Existence alone this was in the beginning, one only without a second '? 'Was' (refers to) a qualifying act; 'in the beginning' is a temporal qualification; the limitation 'one only without a second' excludes the existence of any other controller; the words 'without a second' declare the property of being the material cause of the world, and consequently, omniscience and omnipotence. How can Brahman become the cause of the world in both senses, in the absence of omniscience and omnipotence?". This is the statement of the reply.

Qualified-non-dualism is established in the very same section, in the consideration of the primary significance of the word "Sat" applied to Brahman. "It is not proper to take 'Sat' which is of the form of both stem and suffix to indicate only one object; for through its stem and through its suffix it denotes two objects. Thus the dictum of the learned: 'the word Sat indicates Sakti and Siva by means of the stem and suffix; they both are Brahman; through (their) harmony, they ensual all the worlds.' It is Paramesvara alone, as qualified by Sakti of the form of the world subtle and gross, intelligent and non-intelligent, that is the object denoted by the word 'Sat'." The use of "Brahman" in the singular in that context is for the purpose of reminding (one) that Sakti and Siva should not be understood separately, but Siva alone as qualified by Sakti; just as the singular (is used) in the Nyāya Sūtra "The meaning of a word is the individual, form, and genus (N. S. II. 2, 65)" to remind (one) that the individual, the form, and the genus are not distinctly signified (as being other than) the nature of the individual as qualified by the genus and the form. The qualification "they ensoul all the worlds" dispels the doubt that qualified non-dualism does not result merely from the fact that the word "Sat" meaning Brahman denotes Siva qualified by Sakti, since there exists the inert world composed of ether etc.; (and thereby) it serves to show the inseparability of that (world) from Sakti and Siva, through the element of Sakti. The same is made clear in the later portion of the commentary (beginning with) the words "gross, subtle," etc. The meaning of the word "Sat" as explained there applies equally to the word "Brahman." Since the determination of the meaning of "Sat" is under discussion, that alone is taken.

Hence it is that in the section about bhūmā, (I, 3, 8 and 9) in explaining the word "Brahman" along with "bhūmā," all the worlds are shown to enter therein. Now, by the definition of bhūmā as "That wherein nothing else is seen, nothing else heard, nothing else known," how can it be declared that where the bhūmā is experienced, there is absence of all other perception? For, if the world exists, it is not possible to prevent the perception etc., thereof. (This objection) is raised in the words "when the world exists, how is it possible to prevent the perception by the released souls, of that which does not serve the goal of man?"; and the reply is shown by establishing that though the world is real it becomes the object of perception only as entering into what is signified by the word bhūmā, and not as separate therefrom:

"This material world is not indeed what is perceived by the released souls. Brahman Himself, of the nature of unsurpassed Bliss, comes within the range of (their) perception, in the form of the world." Thereupon is cited with approval a text which declares that the world becomes an object of perception to liberated ones, only as entering into what is denoted by the word Brahman which is of the same significance as the word bhuma. "So, indeed, the Sruti (says) then he becomes that, Brahman embodied in ākāśa;' to released ones, after their attainment of release, the variegated universe, the object of perception, becomes Brahman qualified by Energy (Sakti) of the form of Supreme Light (paramākāśa), and comes within the range of (their) perception only in the form of Brahman." This sense is explained later in the commentary, on an elucidation of what goes before in the context (of the Sruti):1 "The released soul is praised in such words as 'he attains independence, he attains lordship of the mind (manas)' and so on. By (the words) 'lord of speech' and so on, is declared his possession of speech and other senses, pure, under his control and untainted by matter. On his attaining such a state, this visible variegated universe becomes Brahman Himself embodied in Light (ākāša); this is the inner-significance (of the erised by a circles auspiclousness and exists in relation ("txet

Again, in the fourth chapter, in commenting on the sutra 2.222 "Bhave jagradvat, (if there is a body, then as in the waking state)" (IV, 4, 14), this sense is elaborated (1) by the (following) statement of objection and reply: "Now, if it be said that when

^{1.} The text of the Sruți is, "āpnoti svārājyam, āpnoti manassaspatim, vākpatiścak u patih, śrotrapatir vijnānapatih, etat tato bhavati, ākāša śarīram Brahma, satyātma prāņārāmam, mana ānandam" (Taitta I, 6).

(there is) enjoyment in the nature of perception of the things of this world by released ones, then by their experience of what does not serve the goal of man, the absence of the train of bondage and suffering cannot be secured, no, (we reply), since there is no perception of the world by liberated ones in the form in which it does not serve the goal of man. This universe is indeed perceived as of the form of Brahman, by released ones"; (2) by his later citation of the text, "So, indeed, the Sruti, 'then he becomes that'" and so on; and (3) by his explanation thereof.

The answer to the objection "since the inert world exists, how can qualified-non-dualism result from the mere fact that words like Sat denote Siva as qualified by Sakti", is indicated in the verse (cited as) authoritative, in the words "they ensoul all the worlds". This has been made clear by its being established in the Prakrty-adhikaraṇa (I, 4, 23 et seq) and the following sections, that the entire universe is the transformation of Sakti. Qualified-non-dualism alone being thus expounded everywhere, how does the doubt arise as to the acceptability of pure non-dualism?

Further, the section "Na sthānato'pi" and the following one set out only to establish that the form of Brahman is characterised by stainless auspiciousness and exists in relation to the world, and that it is not devoid of qualities. Thus (proceeds) the first of these sections: the initial doubt is whether Brahman is endowed with attributes or not. For that purpose, (there arises) the doubt whether, in the case of Brahman revealed by texts like "He who stands within the earth etc.," the predicates of (1) residence in the earth and so on, (2) the possession of these as his body, and (3) the controllership of these are true or untrue. For that, the (further) doubt (arises) "if the predicates are true, will the consequent defects (of such residence etc.,) affect Brahman or not?"

This being the position, the prima facie view (is as follows): 2.31

If residence in the earth etc., embodiment therein and so on were true of Brahman, then just as for man there are defects bound up with the subtle and gross bodily conditions in the states of waking, dreaming, deep sleep, swoon and death, similarly would they (attach) to Brahman also; for, there is no difference (between the two) in respect of embodiment; because, (further) it is declared in the sūtra "Deha yogādvā so'pi (or it, the concealment, may be due to conjunction with the body)" (III, 2, 5) that the evils of transmigration are dependent on connection with the body; and (also) because, it is admitted by all that residence in bodies made filthy by (the presence of) faeces, urine, flesh etc, is as highly distasteful as residence in Raurava and other (hells).

Nor may it be said that while pleasure and pain are experienced by him who resides in a city belonging to a King, as a conseqence of the King's orders, to the King himself, though resident therein, that does not occur, and that the same (difference) may hold here also. The cause of the suffering consequent on the operation of the King's orders, is not, indeed, mere residence in the King's city; rather is it a special (consequence) of being subject to the King's orders. The King indeed is not subject to his own orders. Hence, it stands to reason that the King though resident in his own city is untainted by the suffering consequent on the operation of his own orders. In the case, however, of evils experienced in the body, residence in the body is itself the cause.
Hence, just as of the suffering connected with an evil-smelling prison, the presence in the prison is itself the cause, affecting him who resides there, of his own will, as the governor thereof, in the same way as him who is cast in the prison cell, similarly the suffering consequent on the body will surely occur to him who is present therein as the controller, in the same way as to him who is bound therein.

- 2 312 Nor may it be urged that since suffering is controlled by karma, though Brahman may reside in the body, for Him who is free from karma, suffering consequent on bodily residence cannot come about. Even karmas only endow (different kinds of) bodies such as those of gods, men, cattle, birds, etc., suitable to the special varieties of suffering and cause the souls that enter therein to suffer. If for the Lord, embodiment in various bodies may come about irrespective of the suitable karmas, then, from the statement of the non-existence of karma, what (indeed) can be gained? It cannot, verily, be said that the suffering caused by evil smell etc., that may come to him who is cast in jail for trans-8-811 gressing the King's orders does not occur to the person in authority that enters the jail as its governor, merely on the ground of his not having displeased the King. therein, that does not coency
- Further, experience of suffering will certainly come to Brahman, since, as present in all bodies, He becomes the object of denotation of such terms as Brahmin and so on, which enter into injunctive and prohibitory statements; and being, therefore, unavoidably affected by the sins resulting from the disregard of injunctions, He becomes subject to karma. If it be said that because of the text about freedom from sin etc., (apahata pāpmatva etc.,) there is no possibility of Brahman being subject to karma, (we ask) how can that text prevail against the conclusions that Brahman is the subject of denotation of terms like Brahmin etc.,

entering into injunctive and prohibitory statments and that He is subject to karma, (conclusions) that result if we accept as true the presence of Brahman in all bodies? Hence, because of opposition to texts which are purportful only as enjoining and prohibiting (action), that (other) text may be (declared to be) mere arthavada, whose object is praise of Brahman; desiring to conserve its truthful character, in order to maintain it, one can only show that statements in the Antaryami Brahmana (Brh. III, 7, 1, et seq) about residence in the earth, embodiment therein etc., are not true, but are figuratively made for the purpose of praise. This being done, there results consistency with the Brahmana statement "neither gross nor small, neither short nor tall" (Brh. III, 8, 8) etc., and of the Svetasvatara hymn "What is higher than what is higher than the world, that is without form and without pain (Svet. III, 10)," (texts) which predicate flawlessness only in the absence of the body. Therefore, Brahman's residence in the earth etc., His embodiment therein, His control thereof, the omniscience, omnipotence etc., needed for that control, all these are imagined. Brahman is free from qualifications; because of the text "Truth, knowledge, (Taitt. II, 1)" etc., only the form of Intelligence is to be admitted. Would be admitted work to be admitted.

Here is the siddhanta: to Brahman in Himself flawless, even though present in the earth and so on, defects do not attach. The dual characteristics of the absence of the taint of any defect and the presence of unsurpassed auspicious qualities are well known to belong to Brahman, from all texts, both Sruti and Smrti, such as the following: "This Self, free from sin, old age death, grief, hunger and thirst, whose desires come true, whose purposes come true"; "the absolutely, innately pure Self is called Siva, because of the non-existence of the beginningless taint of impurity"; "there is a certain abode of illimitable qualities, (who is) the controller of all the worlds, distinct from both the bound soul (pasu) and the bonds (pasa)." No defect can thus result here (for Brahman), since we hear of the absence of sin, old age, death, grief, and so on, consequent on connection with a body, as also of the presence of a host of qualities, viz., the entertainment of purposes which come true and so on, which are opposed to those defects.

If it be said that even here, though naturally endowed like 2.321 the finite self (iva) with freedom from sin etc., the consequent defects may attach to Brahman, in the state of connection with a body, (we reply) not so. It is only to cure that (doubt), that in each hymn of the Antaryami Brahmana, (Brh. III, 7, 1, et seq), beginning with "He who stands within the earth", absence of defects is declared by the term "Immortal" in the statement "This Self, the internal ruler, immortal,"; in the Atharvasirasi, after the description of the entry of Siva into all things as their internal ruler, in the words "He entered within that which is within", by the gods who thereby understood the self-hood (of Siva) in all things, the following words of praise are offered: "He who is Rudra and Brahma, He is the Lord, to Him, verily, we bow", "He (who is Rudra) and Visna", and so on (A. Sirasi, II, 1-32); in each hymn thereof, it is only to remedy the defects that may follow from connection with the respective bodies (of Brahmä, Vispu, Mahesvara etc.,) that the entire host of lordly and other qualities, opposed to those defects, is predicated by the term Lord (bhagavan). Further, though Brahman and the jiva are connected > with the same body, the difference in the enjoyment and nonenjoyment of the fruit of that (connection) is declared in the hymn "Two birds of beautiful plumage, inseparable friends" etc., (Svet. IV, 6).

If it be asked "how is it possible, even then, to avert the 2.322 distinctionlessness resulting from statements of formlessness and so on?", (we reply) thus: if two texts conflict, it is not meet to deny the significance of one of these by making it out to have an untrue purport. Rather is it proper to uphold both on the principle that "(all) traditional doctrine is equal (in authority)", by endowing both with true purport. Thus, the very texts which predicate Brahman's connection with bodies declare his non-connection with the defects resulting therefrom. In the text "What is known as ākāśa is, verily, the dispenser of names and forms; what is within that, that is Brahman, that is immortal, that is the Self, (Ch. VIII, 14, 1)," after declaring of the Supreme akasa, its controllership of name and form, because of its identity therewith as transforming itself into them, it is made out that, though immanence in name and form is mentioned of Brahman, yet by the statement of non-contact therewith in (the text) "What is within," (it follows that) for Brahman there is no identity with them, as in the case of akasa, but rather the relationship only of body and the embodied; if, indeed, there were identity, there would be occasion to suspect (the presence of) the defects thereof; that, however, does not exist; there is no occasion for the presence of defects of the body in the embodied; thus is the meaning (of the text) explained. Following this, it is proper to understand the text about formlessness also in some such manner as that Brahman is comparable to what is formless, that just as akasa etc., which are bodiless are not affected by flaws due to presence in the body, so also Brahman (is unaffected) and so on.

Nor may it be objected that the texts which declare form 2.323 should be re-interpreted in some fashion because of their opposition to the declarations of formlessness, which are important, on the ground that, as in the example of the governor who enters a prison. for Brahman present in the body, even if it be as controller, consequent suffering is bound to result; for, the production of suffering by things is due to control by karma, not to the nature of things, as is seen from wife and children, cold and heat, refuse and urine causing joy and sorrow, according to the differences in the time (of the experience) or the class of the object. Smrti too says "That which was pleasant, later becomes painful; what was agreeable becomes disagreeable; hence, nothing is essentially painful or pleasant."

As for the argument that, if Brahman be present in all bodies, 2.324 because of His being denoted by terms entering into injunctive and prohibitory statements, there may be experience of suffering for Him also, as a consequence of sins due to the disregard of injunctions and prohibitions, necessarily attaching themselves to Him, that is futile. The understanding of the meaning of a sentence comes about quickly by relating terms like Brahmin etc.. only to what is primarily known thereby, i.e., the finite selves related to the respective bodies, in accordance with the preponderance of well-established usage common to both Vedic and worldly parlance; their function being thus fulfilled, there does not result a fresh understanding of the sense of the sentence through the relation of the purport of that very sentence indirectly to Isvara. who is (only) remotely understood by having regard to what is derived from such doctrines of Sruti as those about Isvara being the internal ruler of all, the controlled serving as bodies to the internal ruler, and terms denoting bodies having an extended application also to what is embodied. Hence, it is that in (the injunction) "the first is to be chanted thrice, the last thrice", in understanding the sentence, the terms first and last relate only to what is soonest understood, viz., the first and last places, not to what are understood later, as connected with the first or last places (in the particular sacrifice which is the model—the Prakṛti rite—), i.e., the Pks beginning with "Pravo Vājā" and "Ājubotā."

Nor does it follow from the text about "Truth, Knowledge" 2.325 (Taitt. II, 1) and so on, that the form of Brahman is Knowledge alone; for, as the form of Knowledge (is accepted) to safe-guard the non-futility of that text, the attributes of omniscience etc., should also be admitted in the interests of the non-futility of such texts as "He who knows all, he who understands all (Mu. I, 1, 9),", "the Lord of all, Sambhu, in the middle of ākāśa (A. Sikhā, III)", and so on, since there is no difference in the revealed character of both kinds of texts. And there being no conflict between the form of Knowledge and the other attributes, there is no need to discriminate between the two. If the text "Truth, Knowledge" etc., (Taitt. II, 1), declared that Brahman is of the form of Knowledge alone, then, indeed, there would be opposition (between that and other attributes). But that is not what it says, but only this much, that Brahman is of the form of Knowledge; that, however, does not conflict with attributes known from other texts. The attribute of "being golden" known from the statement "a golden crown" does not indeed conflict with the attribute of "being set with gems" known by perception. Further, the statement that few Vedanta texts predicate the attributes of omniscience etc., of Brahman, is too trifling; the entire host of Vedanta texts about Brahman shows His possession of attributes. There is not, indeed, any expression about Brahman in the Vedanta from the use of which does not result the absence of some defect or the presence of some auspicious attribute. It is well-known that the two-fold cheracteristics of Brahman are also established by sages who produced the Upabrahmanas of the Vedanta.

The non-attachment of defects to Brahman, though present in the earth etc., is established on the strength not only of the declarations of His two-fold characteristics by Sruti and Smrti but also of the illustrations cited by Sruti. Thus (run) the illustrations cited by Sruti: "Just as the one akaéa becomes manifold in jars etc., so also the one Self is present in the many, as the Sun in sheets of water." By the first of the similes is taught immanence in all (things) as derived from texts like "He who stands within the earth" etc. Thereby is answered the objection as to how one super-sensible Being (can be) present in many, either option, the presence of the whole or of a part, having to be rejected. By the second simile it is taught that, though present therein, just as in the case of akasa so present, there is no taint of defects resulting therefrom. Through that is the objection answered as how to for that which has (the many) for its body. there can be no experience of defects consequent thereon. It is the opinion of Sruti that there is difference in respect of subjection to karma and the absence thereof. Nor can the (following) objection be raised: the Sun while not present in the water is understood as present there; since, however, the Supreme Self, is not in the same way understood as present, while not really present in the earth etc., but is admitted to be really present in the earth and so on, non-contact with defects consequent on the limiting adjuncts cannot hold good of Brahman, as of the Sun. The example "as the Sun in sheets of water" is (cited) only to show the non-existence of the experience of resultant merit or defect, that just as the experience of increase and decrease consequent on the limiting adjunct, water, does not really occur to the Sun in the water, so too experience of merit or defect consequent on presence within the earth etc., does not occur to Brahman. This results from the harmonious understanding of the two illustrations. By explicating the scope of (the simile) to the extent (of making out) the non-presence of Brahman in the earth etc., as of the Sun in water, the first mentioned simile would indeed, be nullified. Nor is there a rule that the illustration and what is illustrated should be similar in all respects; for, comparisons are made both in the Vedas and in worldly parlance only on the basis of similarity in respect of the particular quality intended.

Thus, a section consisting of ten sutras beginning with "Na sthanata" etc., is devoted to establish that Brahman is endowed with attributes, that He is the abode of faultless auspicious qualities. After that, the same is confirmed by (the process of) objection and answer. A further section is made up of nine sutras commencing with "Prakrtaitavattvam hi pratisedhati tato braviti ca bhuyah (it is the this-muchness of the context that the text denies; and it declares more)" (III, 2, 21). The doubt there is whether the possession of two-fold characteristics, established by the previous section, holds good of Brahman or not. In that connection arises this doubt: in the Brhadaranyaka, after stating of Brahman the form of the universe, sensible and supersensible, i.e., of earth, water, fire, air and ether, in the words "Two, verily, are the forms of Brahman, sensible and super sensible" (Brh. II, 3, 1), there is the negation "then follows the teaching, not thus, not thus". Does the negation so made have for its object the sensible and super-sensible forms declared of Brahman, so that what was said to be the form of Brahman, viz., the universe, sensible and super-sensible, is really not so? Or does it refer to the declared this-muchness so that the declared form, of the nature of the universe, sensible and super sensible, does not alone become the form of Brahman, there being a host of other attributes as well?

This is the prima facie view: it is undisputed that by the negative prefix (najñ) in (the sentence) "not thus, not thus," (there is) denial of what is signified by the world "iti" (thus); thus far, there is no dispute. The term "iti" (thus) which denotes a mode, relates to the mode already mentioned. And what are declared earlier are the two modes of Brahman, of the form of the worlds, sensible and super-sensible. Hence, it is proper (to hold) that the denial is of that. The repetition for the sake of comprehension, in "not thus, not thus," is for the purpose of demonstrating the denial in entirety of the two previously mentioned forms. Or else, the two fold statement may have the purport that by one the sensible world is negated, and by the other, the super-sensible world. That the declared this-muchness is denied, is not (a) suitable (interpretation); for, that does not enter into the context, like the two forms; further, the two-fold statement is not purportful in that negation as in the denial of the two forms.

The siddhānta, however, is thus: (the knowledge of) Brahman's being qualified by the form of the worlds, sensible and supersensible, being conveyed by Sruti itself in the earlier statment, and not being attainable by any other means of knowledge, cannot be negated by the succeeding statement, as 'contradiction will result between the earlier and the later, option not being possible in the case of facts, as (it is) in the use or rejection of the sodasin cup. Hence, it is proper to conclude that the mode of the nature of the declared this-muchness, which is entertained in the intellect because of the earlier statment about being qualified by forms, sensible and super-sensible, is here denied.

Immediately afterwards, (the Sruti) predicates again a host of attributes in the residual sentences "there is verily nothing else higher than this 'it is not so." Then (comes) the name, "the truth of the true. The senses are the true, He is the truth thereof" (Brh. II, 3, 6). By the first statement "It is not so," it is said that a being, higher greater than this Brahman said to be within the range of the declared this-muchness, does not exist, thereby being asserted the quality of having none superior to Him. Though there may be none higher than Brahman, yet there are His equals, in respect of embodiment in the sensible and supersensible world, and the control of both of them. There are indeed, among the inhabitants of this planet, adepts in Yoga, and released persons, in whom is (found) as much as in Brahman the capacity to control both (the forms), as embodied therein. remove this doubt, the sentence beginning with "Then the name" etc., after mentioning the name "the truth of the true", gives the derivation thereof. By the term "prana" the individual souls who control the senses are there indicated. They are of the nature of the true; they are unchanging, as there is no origination of their form from another form, as in the case of ether and so on. Superior even to these, is Brahman, the truth, since (for Him) there is no origination even in the sense of the contraction and expansion of knowledge, as in the individual soul. Hence, though in Yogins and in released souls, there may be, after the blossoming out of knowledge, the power to control the world at that time, that did not exist previously when knowledge was in a state of contraction. Hence it is held that Brahman alone is the eternal controller of all the worlds, that there is no finite self equal to Him. Or else, by the entire residual sentence only the absence of equals is taught; the absence of superior (beings) results by the argument a fortiori. In this position, this is the construction of the first sentence. "It is not so"-Brahman alone is higher, greater than the sensible and super-sensible worlds, (which are) the correlate of the this-muchness that is negated; superior to this world, as controller (thereof), there is none other than He. Or else, this (other) construction (is possible): "it is not so"—other than this Brahman, who is within the range of the negation of the declared this-muchness, there is no great being, superior to the world as its controller. In both of these constructions, there is the merit that the word "other" in the text cannot be thought to be purportless.

Now, this residual sentence harmonises also with the position which negates both the forms (sensible and super-sensible). How? This is the meaning of the first sentence: "it is not so"—there is no being higher than the two forms negated, which appears to be other than this Brahman. The second sentence is for the purpose of confirming that. By the term "prana" signifying the senses, sense-objects are indicated. Of the objects of knowledge, in the statements, "the lump of clay exists, the pot exists, the potsherd exists, dust exists' etc., the lump of clay, the potsherd etc., are variable reals, whereas Brahman is the real that is constant along with whatever is known by the predication of existence in all those judgments. The varying (forms) are seen to be imposed on the constant (real), as garland, snake, a fissure in the ground etc., (are imposed) on the "thisness" of the rope. Hence, the variable pot etc., merely appear to be real; Brahman is superior to them, the final truth; this is the sense of that (text). A significant areas pressellent of the lower office harrens

2.3332 If it be said that, since it is possible thus to interpret the residual sentences in conformity with the understanding of "thus" as referring to the two declared forms, any other mode of interpretation is unsuitable, (we reply) that it would be so, if Brahman could be an object of perception in the form of existence, like the

"thisness" of the rope. That, however, is not possible. Texts like "His form does not stand within the reach of vision, no one sees (Him) with the eye" etc., (Katha, V, 1, 9) declare that Brahman, verily, is unmanifest, beyond the reach of perception and other (means of knowledge). The nature of Brahman is revealed by Himself to His worshippers, if pleased with the worship through the sacrifice that is meditation, based on firm devotion. This is understood from the following statements of Sruti and Smrti, "This Self is not to be attained by discourse, by intelligence or by a multitude of texts; Him alone whom He has chosen, by him is (He) attained; to him this Self reveals His form" (Katha, I, 2, 28). "This (Being) is to be seen by supreme devotion, by no other means whatever. Hari, and I, and Rudra and similarly other Gods and Asuras with fierce austerities are to this day desirous to get a sight of Him." Thus, devout contemplation (samradhana) is declared to be the means of the intuition of Brahman. And and soon will appropriate and a different from the attributes of knowledge and bliss, in being the effect (of such meditation). Just as there is no difference between their knowledge and bliss and those of Brahman, so there comes to be no difference between their lordship over the world, and Brahman's lordship over the world. Hence it is that Lord Krana by the repeated practice of meditation, by uninterrupted concentration for a long period, attaining through intuition of Brahman, lordship similar to His over the world, is seen to reveal that to Arjuna in the Gitā. The exhibition by Agastya and Viávāmitra of their capacity to drink up the ocean and to create another heaven, is seen from the Purāṇas. Nor is this improbable; even in our experience, it is seen that those who contemplate the

"Garuda Mantra", attain through the meditation of Garuda, the distinctive property of Garuda, that of counter-acting poison by mere presence. Hence, it is but proper that some distinctive attribute of Brahman's is realised by meditation on Brahman. It being thus settled that devout meditation is the cause of knowledge of Brahman, that its result is the attainment of His lordship and so on, it follows that because of the settled cause and effect not being seen in perceptions like "the pot exists" etc., the statement "not thus, not thus" denies the declared How? The this-muchness, not the declared two-fold forms. lordship manifested in those who have intuited Brahman may be said to be of a nature similar to Brahman's, because of the text "the stainless one attains absolute equality (with the Supreme)." (Mu. III, 1, 3). Hence, just as it has to be accepted that Brahman's nature of knowledge and bliss appears in them, so His lordship too has to be accepted (as appearing in them), as, otherwise, absolute equality does not result. Verily absolute equality is SEED Sequality of all qualities in every detail, not merely some amount of similarity in respect of some one quality. Hence, since even in devotees of Brahman is seen the manifestation of the distinctive attributes knowledge, bliss, lordship and endless other auspicious qualities, there is no room to dispute the conjunction of an infinitude of auspicious qualities with Brahman. Therefore, Brahman is certainly of two-fold character.

Now, if it be said that declaration of the world as of the form of Brahman, in "Two, verily, are the forms of Brahman" can be maintained on the (basis of the) relation of super-imposition between Brahman and the world, any other mode of maintaining it being impossible, and that, therefore, the statement "not thus, not thus" is suitably understood only as negating the super-imposed world, no (we reply), since it is possible to maintain that the world is of the form of Brahman in other ways than by the relation of super-imposition.

That, indeed, is as follows: the term 'rūpa' is indicative of 2.3341 state, not of quality. As both unity and multiplicity are predicated in "Rudra is one only," "All, verily, is Rudra," it stands to reason to understand that what is declared of Brahman in statements like "Two are the forms of Brahman" is a multiplicity of states, like the multiplicity of postures of a single serpent such as being coiled, straight or crooked.

Or else, let there be but difference between Brahman and 2:3342 the world; even then, (the treatment of the world) as of the form of Brahman—in the words "forms of Brahman"—is valid, since from the text "All this, verily, is Brahman" everything is related to the form of Brahman as one genus. Though there is difference between luminosity and what is luminous, yet since they are related to the same genus, brightness (Tejastva), the usage "All this is of the form of brightness" is, verily, observed.

Or else, let neither of these two positions be accepted; on 2 3343 the first view, indeed, two defects—transformation and inertness—may attach to Brahman; on the second view too, that may happen, since the world, dependent on the genus Brahman, is also admitted to be Brahman. Hence, on both views, there will be conflict with all texts predicating of Brahman freedom from faults. Therefore, (the relation) is to be taught here, as on an earlier occasion. Earlier, indeed, in the section "Améo nanavyapadesat" (II, 3, 42, et seq), it is declared of the class of intelligent beings, that it is an amage (element) of Brahman, as a particular mode of what is qualified, being of the same nature as inseparable attributes like light, genus, quality, and the body. Let this be (true) of the class of non-intelligent beings as well; it is that which is said to be a form of Brahman; (hence) there is no flaw. In this way, the Puranic statement about things intelligent and non-intelligent constituting the body of Brahman (as stated in the verse), "The whole world of the nature of intelligence and non-intelligence is without a doubt the form of the all-pervasive Teacher of the Universe, for the reason that the Universe is under His control," comes to have the same meaning as the text "He of whom the earth is the body" and so on (Brh. III, 7, 3).

2.34 From the negation of old age etc., of Brahman in such texts as "By the ageing of this, that does not age," (Ch. VIII, 1, 5), "Not gross, not minute, not small, etc.," (Brh. III, 8, 8), the inference as to embodiment in the world is necessitated. Only if present therein, can we explain the declaration of the denial of the consequent defects, when there is a possibility of their being in Brahman. Hence, Brahman is flawless, possessed of attributes, related to the world. After having thus in two sections established of Brahman that He is endowed with qualities and connected with the world, in the section beginning with "Param atassetūn-māna-sambandha-bheda-vyapadeśebhyah (because of the mention of bridge, measure, connection, difference, there is a higher Being)" (III, 2, 30), it is shown by statement of prima facie view and conclusion that there is no other real, higher, greater than this Brahman.

Further, the section "Adaradalopah (Non-omission, because of emphasis)" (III, 3, 39) is set forth in the third chapter to prove that the attributes, physical form etc., of Siva are true and eternal, not fictitious and impermanent. This is how (it is done). In the doubt whether Siva's physical form characterised by blue throatedness etc., and His hosts of qualities like having purposes which come true, are but imaginary or the reverse, whether (consequently) any of them are to be dropped (in contemplation) or not, the prima facie view is (as follows).

It is acknowledged, because of texts like "Brahma is embodied in ākāśa," "He who shines in the form of Bliss, immortal" and so on, that Siva's physical form is of the form of Bliss. Nor does stoutness or thinness result for Bliss through the (the existence of) sides, throat, hands, fingers and so on. If that were admitted to happen, the possession of joy as the head etc., as declared of Brahman that is abundance of Bliss, in the Taittiriya Upanicad, in the words "of him, joy is the head, satisfaction is the right wing, supreme satisfaction is the left wing, Bliss is the body, Brahman is the tail, the support" would also be true. In that case, what is concluded earlier in the sutra "Priyasirastvādyaprāptirupacayāpacayau hi bhede (having joy as the head etc, do not apply; with difference there would be increase and decrease)" (III, 3. 12) would be contradicted. Therefore, the physical form is imagined; and the collection of attributes mentioned therewith is also imaginary, that being opposed to texts (teaching) absence of attributes.

As for the siddhanta, (it is as follows). From the emphasis 2.42 secured by repetition of (the qualities of) blue-throatedness, lordship of Uma, having purposes which come true and so on, the truth of the physical form and of the collection of attributes necessarily results. Since Sruti is authoritative, only as stated in the Sruti may (anything) be admitted, by those who take refuge therein. For the Supreme ākāśa of the nature of Bliss, change in the nature of increase and decrease is admissible; not so however, the possession of joy as the head and so on. It follows that they are imaginary, since there is no means of ascertaining their significance, and further, they are mentioned along with the (clearly) imaginary wings, tail etc., of the (selves) of food and so on. If it be asked, what then is the purportful repetition here, we reply thus: in the meditation of (the Being within) the solar orb, in the words "obeisance to the golden-armed, golden-coloured, Him of the form of gold, the lord of gold", there is repetition of the (idea of) lordship of Uma in different terms. In the Sri Rudropa nigad, there is repetition of blue-throatedness in the words "obeisance to the blue-necked one and the blue-throated one." In the Daharavidyā, (as) in the Kaivalyopanisad, the companionship of Uma and the possession of three eyes are mentioned together, in the words "The companion of Uma, Paramesvara, the noble one, the three-eyed, blue-throated, gracious one" (Kaivalyopanisad I, 7). In the same Daharavidya, (as) in the Taittiriya Upanişad, there is repetition (of the ideas), through the words "dark and tawny", "diverse-eyed", in the statement "the person who is dark and tawny, whose virility is the (upward-rising) fire, who is diverse-eyed" (MN, XII, 1). So, also, the re-statement in the Sandilyavidyā of the qualities mentioned in the Daharavidyā, such as having purposes which come true and so on, is repetition.

2.421 How can re-statment due to differences of śākhā (branches of the Veda) amount to (purportful) repetition? Where there are

^{1.} The word abhyāsa has been used in the present context to refer to such repetition as may convey significance, serve, in other words, as tātparya linga. Other repetition is but re-statement (punar-āmnānam). In the translation, the wearisome re-iteration of the word "purportful" is avoided, it being understood wherever "repetition" is used, and not any other synonymous word.

differences of śākhā, re-statement is for the purpose of their being known by those who study the respective branches; re-statement where meditations are different, is for the purpose of having a knowledge of the various qualities (to be contemplated), since the qualities of one form of meditation cannot be understood in another, except by combination (upasamhāra). The re-iteration of certain qualities even in the same śākhā and meditation, is for the purpose of reminding (one) of the identity of meditation (which is) serviceable to the combination with one another of the qualities mentioned. If it be said that re-statements which have thus other purposes, should not be considered as repetition, whereby significance may be ascertained, (the answer) is (as follows):

This is the sense of the section beginning with "Anandadayah 2.422 pradhānasya (Bliss and so on as belonging to the subject, have to be understood everywhere)" (III, 3, 11): the qualities of Truth, Knowledge, Bliss etc, the distinctive physical form of the nature of Bliss, qualified by blue-throatedness, companionship of Uma and so on, since all these are included in the definition of the essential nature of Siva, the Supreme Brahman, they are to be combined in every meditation on the Supreme, since they are required for the purpose of attaining to Him in experience, as distinct from all other deities such are Brahma, Vianu, etc. also established in the Priyasirastvādi section, which succeeds the above, that even the qualities of having purposes which come true and so on, attained by released ones, these too are to be combined in all meditations on the Supreme, since they are required there, on the principle that the fruit is of the same nature as the medita-In both these, the cardinal principle of combination (of qualities) even where meditations are different, is only the need for the same. It is only on the same principle that, though (the wearing of sacred ashes, the repetition of meditations, the cessation and non-attachment of past and future karma as the result of the observance of meditation throughout life, and the distinctions of path and seasons, such as those of light and so on, all these are mentioned only in some one meditation or other, their being understood in all meditations on the Supreme is established in the Sarvāpekṣā (III, 4, 26) and other sections, by the removal of the special objections that arise in each case. Thus, since qualities like having purposes which come true, though mentioned in one place are understood in all meditations on the Supreme, their re-statment in other meditations, serving no other purpose, remains only as repetition capable of imparting significance. Hence, since by repetition emphasis is secured, physical form and the host of qualities are not to be omitted.

As for the texts predicating absence of qualities, (they), corrected by texts predicating qualities, continue (authoritative) as denoting the absence of objectionable qualities; for, on the principle of the padāhavanīya, it is desirable to postulate that mode of settlement which would secure authoritativeness for both texts.

2.5 The next section "Upasthite'tastadvacanāt (Of him who has approached Brahman; because of that being declared)" (III, 3, 40) is set out for the purpose of proving that Brahman attained by the released ones is of the nature of Siva alone, endowed with physical form and qualified by eternal faultless attributes, that there is no Brahman, free from qualities, (and) transcending that (other), which is attained by the released ones. This is how (it is done): the doubt is whether Brahman attained by the released ones is other than Siva or is Siva Himself. For that, there is the doubt whether release is the attainment of the condition of Brahman without qualities or the attainment of similarity to Brahman with qualities.

(This is) the prima facie view: hundreds of texts proclaim the position that the Supreme Brahman is formless and attributeless and that the attainment of that condition is liberation. The text declares with emphasis that "being Brahman alone, he attains Brahman (Brh. IV, 4, 6)", "he, who knows that Supreme, Brahman, verily, becomes Brahman Himself, (Mu. III, 2, 9)." Therefore, Siva, endowed with form and qualities is not the Supreme Brahman; nor is the attainment of equality with Him, ultimate release.

But the siddhanta (is as follows): only Siva of the form 2.52 above declared, is the Supreme Brahman; only the attainment of equality with Him is supreme release. Because, after the devotee has attained (Him) through meditation, as present within the small lotus (dahara pundarIka) and so on, there comes about the manifestation of his own form, only as a consequence of which, there are his enjoyments, such as laughing etc., which are described in the texts "This serene being rising above the body, having reached the Supreme Light appears in his true form; he moves about there laughing, playing and enjoying, with women or vehicles or relatives (Ch. 8, 12, 3)" and so on; and further because, in the text"(the) stainless (one) attains supreme equality (Mu. III, 1, 3)", the attainment of supreme equality is declared of the stainless one. 1 The manifestation of one's own form or the destruction of the impurity called anjana does not indeed exist except in the condition of final release. The texts that deny qualities like those which declare them of Siva, the Supreme Brahman. have the purpose of negating objectionable qualities. The particle "eva" in the texts "becoming Brahman alone, he attains Brahman", "he who knows Brahman becomes Brahman alone" (though apparently meaning alone), in conformity with texts about equality here means "iva (like)"; for, the "eva" particle is seen to be used in the sense of "iva" in the text about sleep "(he) becomes blind, sheds tears as it were, reaches annihilation as it were," where vināśameva meaning annihilation alone, is used in the sense of annihilation as it were. Or else, this is the meaning of the two texts: "he attains Brahman only after obtaining Brahman's nature through the expansion of knowledge; he who knows the Supreme Brahman becomes himself capable of expansion through the expansion of knowledge. Thus, Brahman is only (that Being that is) endowed with attributes, possessed of physical form, connected with the world and with qualifications, not devoid of qualifications; in the system of Srikanthacarya who has established qualified-non-dualism as the final conclusion, by himself establishing (the above conclusion as to Brahman) in many places, and by expounding that sense through the sutras in several sections, where is the room for imagining that pure-non-dualism is his final view?

For those who take their stand on Brahman without qualities, release without any need of departure (on the path of light etc.,) is declared in the words of the aniyama and other sections, "for devotees of what is non-related, there is liberation even here"; since, (however) that declaration begins with the words "Some say", it is clear in every case that it is a statement of opinion other than (the author's), 2.7 And as for the conclusion in the sutra "Sastradretyatupadeso.

Vamadevavat (The instruction is due to the insight based on Scripture, as in the case of Vamadeva)" (II, 1, 31) and other such sutras, that the cause of release is the devotee's contemplation of non-difference with Siva, that relates to imagined non-difference. Hence, it is that in the commentary on the sutra "Prakasadivacca vaišesyam prakāšašca karmaņyabhyāsāt (And there is non-difference as in the case of light; and the light is intuited by repeated (III, 2, 24), occurring in the Prakrtaitavattva meditation)" section, it is shown that the basis of the contemplation of identity with Siva is imaginary, by means of the illustration of the contemplation of identity with Garuda, the basis of which is imaginary; (these are the words of the commentary); "The manifestation by Kṛṣṇa and others of His (Brahman's) lordly qualities by contemplation of identity with Him, is seen in the words 'I give thee celestial vision; look at my lordly Yoga (my identification with By the repeated contemplation of (identity with) Brahman, in Viśvāmitra and Agastya (are seen) the capacity to create another heaven and to swallow the ocean; in (our) experience too (there is) the attainment of the distinctive qualities of Garuda by magicians, through contemplation of Garuda." Even by Sudarsanācārya in the "Tātparya-Samgraha," only this illustration of contemplation of identity with Brahman is cited; "Padmanabha is said to be the Supreme Brahman, and the Supreme Real, the Supreme Light, and the Supreme Lord, since delighting only in contemplation of Thee, he is non-different from Thee, as the magician by contemplation of Garuda, is non different from Garuda" ("Śruti-Sūkti-Mālā," verse, 42). It is reasonable to hold that that is the opinion of Srīkanthācārya too, who follows him.

^{1.} This is the "Catur-Veda-Tātparya-Samgraha," known as the "Sruti-Sūkti-Mālā," The author had another name-Haradatta.

Now, if the commentator's vision is directed to qualified-none dualism and the difference of the finite self from Brahman, then what is said in the janmadi section (I, 1, 2) and the arambhana section (II, 1, 15, et seq) about Brahman of the form of existence being the object of such perception as the "pot exists", fails to fit in (to the system): (those statements are as follows): "Material causality of all results for Brahman, the persistent existential element in all things, (as seen from the judgments) 'the pot exists', 'the cloth exists'. It is of pots etc., of the nature of clay, that clay is regarded as the material cause" (I, 1, 2); "if it be said that just as the presence of clay is seen in (the judgement), 'the pot is clay,' the presence of Brahman is not similarly seen in (the judgment) 'this world is Brahman', (we reply that) the presence of Brahman of the form of existence is certainly seen in all, (as in the judgments) 'the pot exists', 'the cloth exists' " (II, 1, 16). statement (is made) for the purpose of giving room for the inferential conclusion as to the illusoriness of the world (on the ground) that the variable pot, cloth and so on are imagined in the continuous existent Brahman, like snakes etc., imagined in the thisness of the rope. Nor may it be objected that the statement is for the purpose of exhibiting the material causality of Brahman, that (purpose) alone being explicitly mentioned. If, of Brahman, material causality of the variety that transforms itself into the effect, as non-different therefrom, were acceptable, then indeed, for the purpose of explaining it, perceptions like "mud pot", "mud jar" which make one understand the non-difference of the effect from the material cause, would have to be cited in illustration. And Brahman being the material cause of the world in that fashion, is not acceptable to Srikanthācārya, that (view) being refuted in the Prakrti section (I, 4, 23 et seq.). Hence, it is proper to take this as an illustration of another mode of presenting the perception of imagined identity, analogous to the perception "this is a serpent" or "this is a fissure in the ground" in the rope.

Thus, in the Atr section (I, 2, 9 et seq), while commenting on 2.811 the first half of the "Yada tama" hymn (Svet. IV, 11) the word "tamas", darkness, is explained by the (following) objection and reply, as referring to the ignorance prevalent among finite selves at the time of the deluge: "Now, if it be asked how can the world be of the nature of darkness, if the eternally luminous Siva, the Supreme Brahman exists, no, (we reply), for, what defect can there be in the self-luminous Siva, the witness of all? For the finite selves lacking bodies and sense-organs capable of apprehending objects, which as devoid of name and form are incomprehensible, there is no apprehension of the world, through their own cognitive faculty, enveloped in impurity; even for the self-luminous Siva, there is no apprehension as before (the deluge). Hence, the final state, of the nature of Supreme sleep, marked by the absence of all diversity of effects, is called tamas (darkness)"; then in commenting on the latter half of the same hymn, in the Prakṛti section (I, 4, 23 et seq) in the words "the dispeller of the darkness of that period, the Supreme Prajñā, the energy of Knewledge, of the form of the great manifester, came forth", there are predicated of the Intelligence-Energy (Cit-Sakti) of Siva, the function of dispelling the darkness, of the nature of ignorance, -(which is) declared in the first half (of the hymn), (to be) of the nature of ignorance among the finite selves -and the function of manifesting objects like put, cloth, etc., to finite selves, (as seen from the name) the great manifester.

In the arambhana section, it is shown that the manifestation 2.812 experienced in finite intellects, as "the pot appears to me" is of the nature of Brahman's Intelligence, in the words, "If the world were not pervaded by Siva of the nature of existence and intelligence, then, deprived of existence and manifestation, how could it be seen to exist or to appear? It would be but unreal" (II, 1, 16). Of the happiness experienced by the finite self when he says "I am happy", it is said in the following works of the anandamaya (I, 1, 13 et seq) and the abhavam Badari (IV, 4, 10 et seq) sections, that it is of the nature of a fragment of the supreme Energy that is of the form of Brahman's Bliss: "Of the self of Bliss, it is declared in the text 'This, verily, causes delight', that He is the cause of the bliss of finite selves. Only he who is full of Bliss himself can cause delight to others" (I, 1, 15); "Who indeed could breathe, who could live, if this akasa that is Bliss, were nonexistent? This, verily, causes delight. He is the essence; having obtained this essence, one becomes blissful;' in these words, it is declared of that (Cit-Sakti) that it is the object of all enjoyment; thus it is that the gradations in the manifestation of Bliss, up to Brahman, due to obscuration by limiting adjuncts, are declared in the text commencing with 'This is one bliss of a human being' up to 'This is one bliss of Brahman'" (IV, 4, 14); all this fails to harmonise (with the view of difference between Brahman and the finite self). This is indeed (taught) for the purpose of expounding the non-difference of finite selves from Brahman, for, it is inconsistent with the view of difference, since one's knowledge does not result from another's nor one's bliss from another's bliss.

If such an objection be raised, it will be said that it is not the view of the acarya that the perception "the pot exists" etc., has for its object Brahman that is the Višesya element (i. e, the subject of qualities). For, in the Prakrtaitavattva section (III, 2, 21 et seq) directed to inquire into the correlate of the negation in the text, "then the teaching 'not thus, not thus', is raised: "now, Brahman of the form of existence that persists in (such perceptions as) 'the pot exists', 'the cloth exists,' etc., is real; other variable objects like pot etc., are negated by the text in the statement 'not thus'"; then, introducing by way of reply the sutra "Tadavyaktamāhahi (the Sruti says indeed, that it is manifest)" (III, 2, 22), the purport of that sutra is explained by himself in the words: "Brahman's form is not manifested by other means of knowledge, such as perception. For the reason stated by 'His form does not stand within reach of vision, it is not perceived by the eyes' and so on, it follows that the existence cognised through perception is not Brahman." Therefore, the the two texts cited above from the janmadi (I, 1, 2) and the arambhana (II, 1, 15, et seq) sections should be related to the attributive element of Brahman (i.e., that aspect which is made up of attributes, in other words, Cit-Sakti). For, by accepting the transformation of that into the form of all the worlds, the suitability results of explaining by the illustration from perception of non-difference. Nor may it be urged that since in the Iksati section (I, 1, 5, et seq) Brahman is himself said to be existence, it is not proper to predicate of Him the experience of existence. For, it is just as reasonable to predicate existentiality of Brahman, though He is Himself existence, as to predicate Knowledge and Bliss of Him, who is himself the knower and the enjoyer. As for what is said of individual knowledge and enjoyment of objects being fragments of Brahman's Knowledge and Bliss, that holds even if Brahman and the finite self are different. For, just as the distinct hearing of various individuals belongs to the ether as delimited by the hollow space in (different) ears or to space as delimited by the cardinal points, the distinctively individual cognitions and enjoyments may be recognised to be elements of Brahman's Knowledge and Bliss, as particularised by their respective internal organs (antahkarana).

Now, in the abhavam Badari section (IV, 4, 10 et seq), it is 2.821 said without reference to delimitation due to the functioning of the internal organs, that the form of the supreme goal enjoyed by liberated ones, is but the replete, unlimited Bliss of Brahman. Then, after praising it in the words "It is the Supreme Energy of the form of the Supreme Primal Being, the Highest Existence, the Harmony of Resplendent Bliss, that, as the form of Brahman, is called the Supreme ākāśa, which is the means of attainment of the goal directly for Brahman and the released souls, indirectly for the rest" (IV, 4, 14), after expanding the sense of "indirectly for the rest," in the passage beginning with the words "Thus, indeed; 'who, verily, can breathe, who can live", and so on, and ending with the words "the manifestation of Bliss is declared as of (varying) grades", the sense of the passage, "that which is the means of attainment of the goal directly for Brahman and released souls" is explained, through the statement "That Bliss is present in full in Brahman and the released ones, without limitations, because of the text 'and of the sage untormented by desires'." Then raising the objection as to how, if the sage untormented by desires is a released soul, there can be a declaration of the experience by the sage untormented by desires of the bliss of human beings and so on, ending up with the bliss of Prajapati,—which are (but) fragments of the Bliss of Brahman, manifested in varying degrees, because of the distinctive nature of limiting adjuncts-it is said in reply, "The wise one, the sage untormented by desires, is he who performs agnihotra and other rites, without desires and with intellect dedicated to Brahman. Of that liberated one, and of Brahman, the bliss is equal. In the case of him, who, by the excellence of his meditation (Yoga), transcends each stage, realising that what is gained at each prior stage is little, the bliss manifested to him at each stage may be compared to the bliss of human beings and so on; thus there is no contradiction." How is this consistent with the view of difference between Brahman and the finite selves? To the happiness of another, not appropriated as distinctly one's own, by some special act, the character of being the Supreme human goal to be experienced cannot surely attach.

If this (objection) be urged, it does harmonise (we reply), for, it is the Supreme Energy of the form of the Transcendent Bliss of Siva, the Supreme Brahman, that is acknowledged by the commentator to be of the form of the whole world, intelligent and non-intelligent. Hence, from the non-difference thereof in essence from the finite selves, there results blissfulness in essence; and from non-difference in respect of their qualities, of the nature of their respective intelligence-energies, (there results) blissfulness in respect of attributes. But to those, who, enveloped in impurity, are bound in the migratory cycle, that (Supreme Energy) does not shine either in itself or as non-different from them in respect of essence or attribute; therefore, it becomes an object of human endeavour, (only) as a fragment admitting of gradations, due to the limitations imposed by the special activities of the respective internal organs. As for liberated ones, it shines in all these three ways (i.e., in itself, and as non-different from them, both in essence and in attribute), hence, impartibly and fully; this is the difference (between the two experiences). (Cit-Sakti) becomes the goal of man, in the form of Bliss, which is an attribute of Brahman and the liberated ones alike; this is made plain even in the present commentary, in the words bliss is present in full, without taint or limitations, in both Brahman and the released souls "(IV, 4, 14). Therefore, even if the finite self be different from Brahman, the Bliss of Brahman may appropriately be the goal in respect of finite selves; in conformity with this, there is no need to suspect any flaw in the view explicitly declared by the commentator as to the difference between Brahman and the finite selves.

This has, indeed, been declared clearly even in the amsa section (II, 3, 42, et seq). There, the prima facie view being stated that Brahman Himself, because of the influence of limiting adjuncts, real or fictitious, attains the form of the finite self, as a consequence of the refutation thereof, it is established of the finite self, that it is an element of Brahman, being of the nature of a particular attribute of the qualified Brahman. Four of the sutras of that section—" Ābhāsa eva ca (they are but fallacious arguments)", "Adreta' niyamat (since the unseen principle exercises no regulative influence)", "Abbisandhyadişvapi caivam (so also of the desires and so on)" and "Pradeśāditi cenna, antarbhavāt (if it be said, because of difference of place, no, since they are all included in Brahman)" (II, 3, 49-52)—are directed to the refutation of prima facie view that Brahman Himself attains the nature of the finite self by either the limitation of ignorance or real limiting adjuncts. Therefore, the final conclusion of the acarya is the position of qualified-non-dualism-that Brahman is qualified by Energy of the form of the worlds, intelligent and non-intelligent, not the position of pure-non-dualism—that Brahman is attributeless, formless, and unrelated to the world. fully : this is the different

Though this is what appears from beginning to end, yet on a careful examination of the implications of the commentary, pure-non-dualism alone is (seen to be) the final conclusion.

Thus the sutra "Aniyamassarvesam avirodhah sabdanumana- 3.11 bhyam (No restriction; there being no opposition to any text revealed or inferred)" (III, 3, 32) (favours this view). The commentary is first directed to the relutation of the prima facie view that departure on the path of light etc., are to be understood only 3118 in those meditations like the Upakośala Vidya where they are mentioned, not in other meditations, since they are not heard of (there). There is no restrictive principle that departure on the path of light etc., are (confined) only to those places where they are mentioned. They come in, rather, in all meditations on Brahman. Only then is there no contradiction of the following Sruti and Smrti texts, "Those who know this, and those who in the forest meditate upon Faith and Truth, etc.," (Ch. V. 10, 1); "Fire, light, day, the bright half of the month" and so on (Bh. G., VIII, 24). Then comes this commentary: "Some say, No restriction', there is no restriction as to departure along the path of light etc., in the case of all devotees. Even if that be so, there is no contradiction of Sruti and Smrti." Though this appears to be the statement of an opinion other than his own, yet he says later, "Even to that (interpretation) there is no objection, since, for devotees of that which is Non-related, there is no need of that (travel along the path of light)", explaining thus the non objectionable nature of the other interpretation, on the ground of the needlessness of the departure on the path of light for devotees of Nirguna Brahman, as if by a reason acceptable to himself; hence, it has to be inferred that both interpretations in the form of two varnakas1 are recognised as expressing his own

^{1.} A varpaka is one of several interpretations of the same sutra, where the interpretations are fundamentally different, not different ways of expressing the same conclusion.

- position, the first of these for the purpose (of showing that the path of light etc., is) common to all meditations on the qualified Brahman, the second for the purpose of negating its applicability to meditation on Brahman without qualifications.
- Similarly, the other opinion is expressed even at the close of the Tadapiteh section (IV, 2, 8, et seq). This is how that section (goes).
- 3.121 The doubt is whether the departure taught in the prior section "Samanaca asityupakramadamilatvam ca (equal up to the commencement of the departure and immortality)" (IV, 2, 7) and the subsequent departure apply to the enlightened one or not. They do not apply; for, attainment of Brahman even here is declared by Sruti in the case of the enlightened ones, in the words "when released of all desires that entered the heart, then does" the mortal become immortal then does he attain Brahman." (Brh. IV, 4, 7). (Further), modes of departure etc., in the case of the unenlightened are declared in the statements relating to the mode of departure, the attainment of another body, enjoyment of the fruit of karma (while) in that body so long as the karma lasts, and the return to this world, having acquired fresh karma, (in the words) beginning with "the tip of his heart glows, by that glow, this self goes up " (Brh. IV, 4, 2), and ending with "So much for him who desires," (Brh. IV, 4, 6); departure of the enlightened one is then denied in the words, "he who does not desire, who is desireless, free from desires, desiring the Self, with desires satisfied, of him the vital airs do not depart; being Brahman, he attains Brahman" (Brh. IV, 4, 6). Nor may it be objected that it is of the enlightened person that departure and travel along the path of light etc., are predicated in the following texts-"Those who know this" etc., (Ch. V, 10, 1), and "going" up thereby he attains immortality" (Katha, VI, 16). For, since at the death of the enlightened person, the merger of all subtle elements, viz., speech, mind, vital air in the Supreme Divinity, Brahman, is declared in the text, "Of this person, dear one, speech is merged in mind, mind in the vital air, the vital air in fire, fire in the Supreme Divinity" (Ch. VI, 8, 6), for him there can be neither departure nor going, dependent on the (possession of) the subtle elements—the senses, mind and vital air. (Again), since the Supreme Brahman is everywhere, there is no need for departure or going. Thus, the texts asserting attainment of Brahman even here, and denying departure, (prove) stronger by showing (their own) consistency and avoiding the inconsistency (of the contrary position). In conformity with this, the texts about departure and going should be said to relate to that knower of Brahman, whose object is liberation by degrees. Nor may it be said that in the text, "of this person, dear one" etc., merger of speech and the rest, in the Divinity, is declared in respect of function only, not of their essence, since, on the latter interpretation, the departure common to both enlightened and unenlightened persons being described, merger of being in Brahman would result (even) of the speech etc., of the unenlightened, and it would not be proper to adopt a fresh interpretation of the expression "merges" in that case (alone). Since the text cited occurs in the context of the Sad Vidya (the teaching of Reality as Existence), (Ch. VI, 2), and the Rupa Vidya (the teaching about the colours of elemental fire, water and the earth, as constitutive of the visible fire, Sun, Moon and Lightning, Ch. VI, 4), the departure described therein relates only to the enlightened person; further, even though of the expression "merges" as related to the merger in mind and the rest, the meaning is merger of function alone, yet on the principle adopted in the sutra "Sysc-caikasya Brahma śabdavat (different senses may hold good of the same word, as of the word Brahman)" (II, 3, 4), the sense of merger of being is preferable, as suitable in relation to the Supreme Divinity. The above is the prima facie view.

Now for the siddhanta. Though Brahman is present everywhere, only on the attainment thereof at a particular place, is there release from the bonds of the body; the bodily bonds continue until the stage of attainment; for, from the declaration of the destruction of the bonds of karma only on reaching the abode of the Supreme Brahman, after crossing the river Viraja, it follows that the subtle body caused by (those bonds) continues to exist. Hence, the mention of the path of light etc., in various places, is only for the purpose of the attainment of the fruit of release, since their mention is in connection with meditations whose fruit is release, and since there is need of that (path). As for what is said about the inappropriateness of going, in the case of the enlightened, since speech and the rest are merged in their being in the Supreme Divinity, that is not (true), for the reason that even after the falling away of the (gross) body, a subtle body continues for the enlightened one, that being seen on the authority of the text about discussion with the Moon and so on. In the Paryanka Vidya is declared the enlightened one's discussion with the Moon, on the path of the Gods; beginning with the words, "those, verily, who depart from this world, they all go up only to the Moon", it goes on thus: "this Moon is the door-way to the world of Heaven. Him who answers, he (the Moon) sets free. He who does not answer, (the Moon) showers him down here as rain. He is born here as a worm or a moth or a bird or a tiger or a fish or a bull or a man or anything else, in various places, according to his deeds and his knowledge. Him arriving, one asks, 'Who art thou?' To him he should reply "etc., (Kausītaki, I, 2). Hence, in conformity with this, the text "then the mortal becomes immortal" should be interpreted to declare only imminence of the attainment of immortality, not to declare immortality even on the cessation of connection with the body. It cannot be said that on the destruction thereof, immortality is declared, since the subtle body may be known to exist in some place; even in enlightened ones about to depart, somewhere, a quality of the subtle body is, verily, seen, viz., heat; that is not a quality of the gross body, not being perceived elsewhere (as in corpses, etc).

As for what is said about the departure of the vital airs of the enlightened one being denied by the text "of him, the vital airs do not depart", that is not (true). What is denied there is the departure of the pranas from the embodied one, not from the body, since the words "of him" relate to the finite self of the context, spoken of as one who has no desires.

Now, by the possessive "of him", the finite self is indicated 3·1221 as that which is related to the pranas, not as the basis of ablation (apadana). The apadana is certainly the body. There being no question of the departure of the pranas from the finite self, the denial thereof is inappropriate.

If it be objected thus, no (we reply). If a basis of abla- 3·1222 tion be needed (to complete the sense), in preference to the body that is not mentioned, the finite self which is mentioned as related (to the pranas) should be understood; further, since of the pranas understood to be in relation to the finite self, the statement of their relatedness would be unfruitful, the possessive which mentions bare relationship should be preferably interpreted to connote the specific relationship of ablation, actor " and as in "He listens to (the singing) of the (where the bare possessive "of" means "proceeding from"). That the finite self alone is the apadana is clear in the recension of one branch, the Madhyandinas; their reading is: "Na tasmāt prāņā utkrāmanti, (from him, the prāņas do not depart)". Nor is there the fault of denying what there is no possibility of; for, there is the possibility of the pranas leaving the enlightened soul, even at the very moment (of death), because of texts which speak of the attainment of Brahman even here, as in "He attains Brahman here" (Brh. IV, 4, 7) and the rest. The departure even of the enlightened one through the (101st) artery in the head has also the support of Smrti; "Of those, there is one (artery) that goes up splitting the solar orb; by that (artery) passing beyond the world of Brahmā, one reaches one's Thus is this sec-Supreme destination" (Yājnavalkya Smrti). tion set out in the six sūtras (IV, 2, 8 to 13), "Tadāpīteh samsāra vyapadesat (since the state of bondage is taught, until the attainment of that)", "Sūkamam pramāņatas ca tathopalabdheh (of subtle form, that being seen)," "Nopa mardenatah (hence, not at destruction)," "Asyaivacopapatteruşmā (heat is consistent only with that)," "Pratisedaditi cenna śarīrat spasto hyekesam (if it be objected on the ground of denial, no, from the embodied one; it is indeed clear in the reading of some)," "Smaryateca (this is also supported by Smrti)."

3.123 By having thus established departure and going in the case of those who meditate on Brahman, the attainment of Brahman here, by those who know Brahman without attributes, may be taken to have been denied; it is to remove this doubt, that the othe opinion mentioned at the close of the aniyama section (III, 3, 32), is mentioned again at the close of the present section also, in the words, "Some say that for devotees of what is Non-related, there is liberation here, even with the falling off of the (gross) body, passing along the path of light etc., not being obligatory (on all)" (IV, 2, 18).

This is the opinion of the acarya who holds the above view: 3.124 the statement "of him, the vital airs," etc., is made after finishing with the unenlightened one in the words "So much for him who desires " and undertaking to say something different about the enlightened one, in the words "Now, as for him who does not desire" and so on; it would appear that in consistency with the implication of that undertaking to declare something special about the enlightened one, that sentence should deny the departure of the vital airs from the very apadana from which they are declared to depart previously in the case of the unenlightened one. The departure of the vital airs of the unenlightened one has been declared previously, as (taking place) only from the body; "that departing, the vital air departs therewith; the vital air departing, the senses depart therewith " (Brh.IV, 4. 2). The departure of the vital airs and the senses is said to occur from the very place whence the finite self is said to depart; thus ends the description of departure along with the finite self. There is no dispute about the departure of the finite self being said to be from the body alone. Since, thus, the text "of him, the vital airs" etc., is most suitably understood as denying departure from the body as apadana, for what reason should this be abandoned? It cannot be said that while in conformity with the principles (of interpretation), the finite self alone which is mentioned in connection with the vital airs may be understood as the apadana, the postulation of some other apadana, not present to the mind, is unwarranted; for, of the body mentioned in the prior context as the apadana, there is presence (to the mind). "Prajapati gave a horse, to (the god) Varuna; he then obtained that deity (i.e., he caught the disease of that name); he suffered much; he thought of a sacrifice to Varuna, on four potsherds; he performed that sacrifice; thereby, he was relieved of the suffering caused by the bonds of Varuns (the disease)." From the drift of this introductory passage, it would appear to one that the performance of a sacrifice to Varuna on four potsherds is about to be enjoined on him who makes a gift of a horse. What follows, however, is "He who accepts a horse, catches hold of the disease, - Varuna; as many horses as he accepts, so many sacrifices should he offer to Varuna on four potsherds (for each sacrifice)." In this injunctive text, directly prescribing the sacrificer, though there is the expression " he who accepts a horse," it is not thought that the duty to sacrifice belongs to him who accepts. What more should be said to show that here, in the absence (even) of a text mentioning the finite self as the apadana, the postulation of that as the basis, merely on principles (of interpretation) is not to be thought of? Nor (is the postulation necessary) in view of the later context. For, what we hear later is only this much: "Being but Brahman On this there is the verse: when all the he attains Brahman. desires that entered the heart are resolved, then, the mortal becomes immortal; (even) here he attains Brahman"; "Just as the slough of a serpent lies dead and cast-off on the ant-hill, so also the body lies. Then, this bodiless immortal spirit is nothing but Brahman Himself, nothing but light" (Brh. IV, 4, 6 & 7). Since the first of these texts teaches the manifestation of the 3.125

ever present Brahman's being in the enlightened one, since, (consequently) there is no need of his going (along a path) in order to reach a special place, the departure of the vital air, helpful in such going, is not needed; hence, the adoption only of that interpretation denying its departure from the body as apadana is satisfactory, not the acceptance of the meaning of the non-separation of the senses from the finite self. Nor may it be said that since the text "He attains Brahman" teaches distinction between Brahman and the enlightened one, as between what is attained and him who attains, the text cannot mean manifestation of Brahman, that, therefore, the particle eva (meaning alone) should be construed in the sense of iva (meaning like), and that this is the sense to be taken -- that (the enlightened one) by the expansion of knowledge, becoming like Brahman reaches Brahman. (For), of the word "apyeti" the sense is not reaching, but merger. Merger is but the manifestation of the identity in the pure subtle form, after abandoning the gross form qualified by vital air, the senses and the mind. Even where there may be the sense of attainment, what is meant thereby turns out to be but the manifestation of identity. In the Brhadaranyaka itself, after the following hymns are given out, "Lead me from the unreal to the real: lead me from the darkness to light: lead me from death to immortality:", there is this Brahmana commenting on the three hymns: "When he says, 'lead me from the real to the unreal, the unreal verily is death, the real is immortality; 'lead me from death to immortality, make me immortal is verily what he says; (when he says) 'lead me from darkness to light', darkness verily is death, light is immortality, 'lead me from death to immortality, make me immortal,' is vorily what he says; (when he says), 'lead me from death to immortality', there is nothing in it, hidden as it were "(Brh, I, 3, 27). In this commentary, the word gamaya (lead) signifying attainment, is interpreted in the sense of the attainment of identity. It is determined therefrom that words signifying attainment in texts of similar import connote the manifestation of identity.

3-126 Similarly, it is quite clear that the second text too in the form of a verse is best understood as negating that departure which has the body as the apadana. Nor, on the principle that the present tense may be used in the close proximity of what is to happen, may the word "here" in "he attains Brahman here" be interpreted as merely eulogistic, indicating the early attainment of Brahman; for, the acceptance of the primary sense alone is preferable. The understanding of the same sense is favoured by the third text too which compares the body abandoned by the enlightened one to the slough on the ant-hill, cast off by the serpent that has not left the ant-hill. The fourth text which predicates of the enlightened liberated one who has abandoned the body, the nature of Brahman, the cause of all life, and to show its suitability, declares (of him) the form of pure knowledge, in the words "nothing but light," is favourable only to that sense. Hence, it is not proper to give up the natural sense of the text "of him, the vital airs do not depart", even in conformity with the rest of the context.

Now, in the Mādhyandina recension, in the place of the text cited, the reading "from him the prāṇas do not depart" is seen. Hence, in conformity therewith, it is reasonable to construe the genitive "of him" in the Kāṇva reading, which expresses relationship in general, as terminating in a special relationship of the form of ablation. Thus, though in the first text, there is not gained for the enlightened one, on the death of the (gross) body, the mention of anything special, as compared with the unenlightened one, yet by the later declaration of the attainment of Brahman, there is obtained the mention of a special feature; hence, the promise to declare something distinctive must be understood to relate only to this. If this be urged, not so (we reply), for, after the text "from him the pranas do not depart", it is said of them, in the word, "they remain even here" that they are merged even here, so as to accord with the sense of the verse "he attains Brahman here": in conformity with this, the expression "from him" should be construed as referring to the body, figuratively on account of the non-difference of the body and the embodied. Hence it is that in the questions of Artabhaga, to the question "when the person dies, do the vital airs depart from him or not?," there is the reply, "'No', said Yājnavalkya, 'they remain even here. He swells, he is filled with wind; being filled with the wind, he lies dead," (Brh. III, 2, 11); it is seen there that of the apadana of the vital airs, there is mention of the physical characteristic of being bloated like a pair of bellows distended with air.

Now, Ārtabhāga's question and the answer (thereto) do not 3 1271 relate to the enlightened one, since that would conflict with the (tenour of the) later context. In that context, indeed, to this fresh question of Ārtabhāga's, "when of the dead person, speech merges in fire, the vital air in air, the eyes in the Sun, the ears in the cardinal directions, the body in the earth, the soul in the ether, the hairs on the body in medicinal herbs, the hairs on the head in the trees, blood and semen in water, where then is the person?" through the secret discourse of Ārtabhāga and Yājñavalkya, it is declared that Karma, of the nature of merit and demerit, is determined on as the abode (of the person), as the later text itself proclaims to that effect. It is there declared: "They two going out discussed it. What they said, it is but Karma that they said. What they praised, it is but Karma that they praised. By meritorious deeds one becomes meritorious, sinful by sinful deeds". Nor may it be said that in earlier statements "he in turn conquers death" (Brh. III, 2, 10), the crossing of samsara (bondage) is declared, and that therefrom it is ascertained that the denial of departure applies to the enlightened one. after the mention, in the words "fire, verily, is death, that is the food of the waters", of the meditation on fire as the food of the waters, that it is declared as the fruit thereof "(he) in turn wards off untimely death". Hence, as a consequence of (the meditation on) the conquest of fire, there is the conquest of untimely death, not the crossing of bondage. Hence, since of that text too the subject is the unenlightened one, and since for the unenlightened one, the departure of the vital airs from the body must necessarily happen, the denial of departure from the finite self alone should be understood as the sense of that (text). For this reason too, it is so: in the earlier text "when this person dies", by the general name "person" the finite self alone is referred to as that from which the vital airs depart. Nor may it be objected that the reference of the term "person" is to the body; for, in the later portion (beginning with) "when of this person speech merges in fire" and so on, there is a separate mention of the body, as related to the person of the context, in the words "the body (Brh. III, 1, 13). Nor may it be said (merges) in the earth " that the self too is separately mentioned, in the words "the self (merges) in the ether"; for, there, as in "ananda atma. Bliss is the central portion" (Taitt, II, 5), there is scope for the expression ". atma", to refer to the heart, as the central organ,

Thus, if it be said that by figurative use, (based on) non-difference of the body and the embodied, the third personal pronoun in "He swells" should be construed as referring to the body, not so; for, because of the lack of occasion for the separation of pranas from the finite self, in the case of the unenlightened one, the denial there becomes improper; it must (hence) be necessarily said that the question and answer relate to the enlightened one.

Now, since from the earlier and later questions and answers referring to the unenlightened one, it must necessarily be said that similar questions and answers also refer to the unenlightened one, the occasion for the separation of the pranas from the finite self must somehow be understood; if (this) be said, no (we reply), since by the mere proximity of question and answer relating to the unenlightened one, it is not possible to counteract the characteristic marks (indicating) the subject (to be) the enlightened one. In the series of Artabhaga's questions, the first question is "What is graha? What is atigraha?". The second is "It is a fact that all this is food to Death; which is the deity whose food is Death?". "When this person dies, do his pranas depart from him, or do they not?" is the third. "When this person dies, what is it that does not leave him?" is the fourth. The fifth is "When of this dead person, speech merges in fire" and so on. These questions not relating to the same topic, there does not result any unity of context. Even so, since the questions from the third onwards have one topic, as ranging round the history of the dead person, of the third question too, as of the fourth and fifth, because of the strength of their proximity, it may validly be said that the topic is the unenlightened one. If this be said, it is answered (thus): by Asvala and others, filled with envy and engaging in a disputation with Yājnavalkya with a desire to defeat him, veiled questions are put, for the most part, with a view to humble him, as not sufficiently quick-witted. For instance, the first question put by Artabhaga "What is graha? What is atigraha?" seems to relate to a sacrificial matter; since it occurs however, in the midst of a discussion concerning the soul, the reply, taking cognisance of the crookedness of the questioner, states that the breath, speech, the tongue, the eye, the ear, the mind. the arms and the skin are grahas, and that the down-going vital air (apana), name, taste, form, sound, desire, action and touch are atigrahas. Similarly by Lahyayani is put the question "Where did the Parikeitas go?", making use of the little understood word "Pārikaita". The reply given by Yājnavalkya, "where the horsesacrificers went", is but explicatory of the sense of that word. So too, envy is plainly expressed in the very tone of these words of Gargi, "Just as a warrior of the Kasis or the Vaidehas may stand, having strung his unstrung bow, and with two foe-terrifying shafts in hand, even so do I present myself before thee with two questions; do thou answer them " (Brh. III, 8, 2). Thus, the proximity of the third question to the fourth and fifth which treat of the unenlightened one, being capable of explanation as serving to generate the confusion that all three relate to the same topic, cannot serve to conclude the sense (of the question); much less (can it so serve), since a different construction may be set up (for the third) in the light of the first and second questions, which refer to entirely different topics, viz,, graha, and atigraha, and the deity who feeds on Death; least of all (is this possible) in view of (the proximity) being over-ruled by the characteristic mark (linga) in the third question, indicative of the topic referring to the enlightened one; this is the line (of criticism). Hence, travelling on the path of light etc., preceded by departure, established only in the case of devotion to Saguna Brahman, is not common also to the knowledge of the pure Brahman. In the interpretation of the sūtras in this view, it will be seen that it is the method shown in the Sāmkara Bhāsya that is acceptable to the ācārya.

So, too, at the close of the section "Arcirādinā tatprathiteḥ (On the path of light etc., that being well-known)" (IV, 3, 1) this other opinion is set out. That section (runs) thus: to the enlightened one, who has departed by the artery in the head, does the attainment of Brahman (come about) only by the path of light or by any other path?

In this doubt, this is the prima facie view: there is attainment of Brahman even by other paths. The stages of the path, such as the palates, the organ hanging down between them, the root of the hair, and the halves of the skull, mentioned in the (following) words of the Vyahrti Vidya, "That which hangs down between the two palates in the form of a nipple, that is the birth-place of Indra, where the root of the hair splits up, dividing the two halves of the skull" (Taitt. 1, 6), these do not indeed find mention in the path of light etc. In the Saibya-prasna in the words "He is led up to the world of Brahman by the samans" (Prasna, V, 5), the property of conveying to the world of Brahman is declared of the samans studied in the Sama Veda. In the words of the Dahara Vidya, "when the (person) departs from this body, then by the very rays he goes up (Ch. VIII, 6, 5)," the property of conveying is declared of the Sun's rays alone, to the exclusion; of all else. Similarly, from the text (indicative) of speed, "when his mind is failing, (even then) does he reach the Sun" (Ch. VIII, 6, 5), there is absence of mention of prior stages like light etc., for the attainment of the Sun. Hence, the attainment of Brahman (is) by the respective paths established according to differences of topic and the mode of meditation, not the path of light etc., alone.

s.132 Now for the siddhanta: it is well known that the path of light etc., is common to all modes of meditation. (It is said) in the Chandogya "Those who know thus, and those who in the forest meditate with faith and austerity" (Ch., V, 10, 1); so too in the Brhadaranyaka, "And they who in the forest meditate with faith and truth" (Brh. VI, 2, 15).

3.133 Now, it may be said that the reference to devotees here, as "those who meditate", may relate to those modes of meditation, where no path whatever is mentioned. This would be so, if the identity of the paths could not be established; but that can be 181 8 shown. That which is described in the Vyāhrti Vidyā as rising above the halves of the skull, the region of the root of the hair, passing up through the nipple-shaped organ, the seat of Indra,who is either the finite self or Paramesvara—that is but departure through the artery in the head. What are referred to later as Fire etc., "in Fire, as Bhūḥ, he rests, in Air, as Bhuvaḥ, in the Sun as Suvah", are but the stages on the path of light etc. The statement of resting in Fire and so on, is in the view that there is rest in (each of) these for some time. In the Vyāhṛti Vidyā, since there is meditation of the three vyāḥṛtis, Agni and the rest, as of the fourth (vyāḥṛti) Brahman, called Mahab, the statement of rest in their worlds, on the strength of this, is proper.

Brahma world " (Prasna. V, 5), it is proclaimed of the saman verses constituting the third of the three moments of the three-fold pranava, an accessory to meditation, that as accessories to meditation they possess the capacity to lead up to Brahman, not as constituting a path; for, meditation with the pranava of three moments is prescribed in the words, "Again, he who meditates on this syllable AUM of three moments, on the Highest person etc.," (Prasna. V, 5), after the mention of the meditation effected with Prapava of one and two moments; and the three moments are taught to be of the nature of the Rk, Yajus and Sāman.

The exclusion, in the statement "Then, by the very same rays" etc., mentions the exclusion of the non-conjunction of attainment with that for (the attainment of) which the rays are prescribed (as paths), not the exclusion of light etc., for, of the same sentence, there cannot be the sense both of leading up by the rays, and the exclusion of all other (paths).

The statement (indicative) of speed which is justifiable, in comparison with the (long and tortuous) path of the Fathers, does not exclude the earlier stages. Nor is there intended any other path for the enlightened ones, having this (the Sun) as the final stage. Thus from the exposition of the one-ness of all paths, it follows that it is not proper to over-ride the general statement of the Pancagni Vidya, which is supported by the principle of parsimony.

In order to remove the doubt that because of this demonstration of the path of light etc., being applicable to all meditations of Brahman, there may follow the denial of the attainment of Brahman, even for those who know Brahman without attributes, the contrary opinion is expressed even at the close of the present section, in the words, "Some (say) that for the devotees of the Non-related there is no (path of) light etc.," (IV, 3, 1). On this view, because of the expression, "well-known," in the sutra "On the path of light etc., because it is well-known," the sutra has to be understood (as expressing) a sense valid generally. It must necessarily be admitted by all that the sense (of the sutra) is (valid) only generally, for, the path of light etc., does not apply to those deities up to Hiranya-garbha, who are released even from the respective worlds they are in. Nor may it be said that the prescription of this as the only path is intended (to apply) exclusively to human beings, who are released through the practice of meditation on the earth; for, in the case of those released after attaining the status of Vasu, Rudra, Aditya, and Marut hosts, (a status) which belongs to the devotees of Madhu Vidya, there must necessarily be another path comprising the status of Vasus etc., as the earlier stages; this is the view of the acarya. Thus, in whatever section rising or departure is established of the knower of Brahman, in all those places, this opinion is expressed, in order to remove the doubt about the applicability of the respective sections to all knowers of Brahman; further, in the aniyamadhikarana, that (opinion) is justified by (the author) himself; from these follows the excellence of the acarya's view. Nor may non-acceptability be suspected from the introduction of the word "some" in every case. These may be explained away for the purpose of showing that he himself here takes his stand on meditation of Brahman with attributes, not on the knowledge of Brahman without attributes, (but) thereby it will not be possible to conceal the excellence of his view, as understood from his exposition through demonstration and repetition, In the anandamayadhikarana, the body of the section is interpreted in this way: the (Self) of Bliss is the Supreme Brahman; the Brahman that is the tail, the support thereof is the Word-Brahman, called prapava, which denotes that (other). Then is introduced, as a different view, with the words "Some say", the position that the Self of Bliss is the Intelligence-Energy (Cit-Sakti), while Brahman that is the tail, the support is the Supreme Brahman; (this position) is expounded as his own, in the words of the janmadi sutra (I, 1, 2): "That indeed, which, being praised in the words, 'within that is the Self composed of Bliss,' is demonstrated to be characteristic of the Supreme Brahman in the words 'that is one Bliss of, Brahman,' because of the unsurpassable supremacy resulting from the repetition beginning with 'this is the inquiry into Bliss', that itself, because of abundance, is spoken of figuratively as Brahman, in the words 'Bliss is Brahman'. Revelling in the enjoyment of such Bliss is said to be the eternal contentment of Brahman'; thereby is shown the ācārya's method of introducing a view acceptable to him, with the word "some".

Again, the acceptance of non-difference in meditation bet- 3.14 ween Brahman and the finite self, which is favourable to the recognition of the knowledge of Brahman without attributes is seen in the section "Pranastathanugamat" (I, 1, 29, et seq). There, it is determined that the vital air which is taught by Indra to be the object of meditation for release, in the words "I am the vital air, meditate on me as the Intelligent Self, as Life, as the Immortal" (Kaustaki III, 2), is the Supreme Self, not Indra. The sutra "Sastradratyatupadeśo Vamadevavat (the teaching is due to scriptural insight, as in the case of Vamadeva)" (I, 1, 31) which has for its object the removal of the doubt "how then does Indra say I I am fol 8 the vital air, meditate on me '?' is then explained in one way: the teaching of Indra "I am the vital air" is due to the realisation of the internal rulership of the Supreme Self because of the texts, "He who stands within the Self" etc., and of the fact that the denotation of words like "I" extends up to the Supreme Self, the internal ruler, because of the texts "That manifested names and forms" etc. Then another interpretation-(viz.,) that the teaching is due, in the alternative, to insight arising from such texts as "That thou art," which have for their object the nondifference of the Supreme Self from one's own Self—is given, in the following words: "Or else, it is determined that Indra's statement is of the same nature as the declaration about being Manu and the Sun, made in the realisation of his own all-pervasitioness by Vāmadeva, who by insight into Vedāntic lore, by meditation on the harmony of Brahman and the Self, had attained the nature of Brahman, got rid of the contraction (of intellect) due to self-consciousness centering round human and other bodies and sense-objects, and obtained Supreme Self-consciousness of the form of the whole Universe."

- yantica (But as the Self, they understand and teach)" (IV, 1, 3), which, raising the doubt whether the contemplation of non-difference occurring in knowledge of the attributeless, (yet) does not occur in meditation with attributes, because of the difference between Paramesvara with qualities and the finite self, due to their connection with contrary qualities, such as all-knowingness and little-knowingness, seeks to show that, though there is empirical difference, yet their non-difference is to be contemplated, through insight into their essential non-difference.
- man is to be contemplated as different from one's own self; or as non-different therefrom, this is the prima facie view. The meditation on Brahman should be performed as different from one's self, because of the demonstration of the Lord (Pati), the Supreme Brahman, as an entity other than the inner self, the bound soul (Pasu), the finite self, in texts and sutras, such as "Rudra, the Supreme Sage, transcending the Universe" (Svet. III, 4), and "But higher, because of the mention of difference" (II, 1, 22), and further, because of the irreconcilability of the nature of Brahman with (that of) the finite self in respect of such quities as omniscience and so on.

But (this is) the siddhanta. Though the Supreme Brahman 3.152 called Siva is certainly higher than the finite self, yet the devotee meditates thereon, in the form "I am Brahman"; for contemplators of old, have understood that as but their Self, in the words "I am verily Thou, O Lord, O Divinity, Thou verily art I" (Jabala Sruti).

Nor is this co-ordinate with the relationship of the body and the embodied. In that case, the statement "I'hou, verily, art I" would alone be appropriate, since in respect of Parameśvara, designated by the word "Thou" there is the applicability of the word "I" limited in denotation to His own body. But the statement "I am, verily, Thou'' is not appropriate; for, it does not stand to reason that the word "Thou" denoting Paramesvara should apply to one's own self which is of the nature of the body of Paramesvara ((and is) designated by the word "I". It is indeed of words denoting the body that a capacity to extend to the embodied (also) results, not capacity to signify the body in the case of those (words) denoting the embodied. Nor may it be said that both sentences have the same kind of sense, the words "Thou" in both sentences denoting Paramesvara as qualified by the attributes mentioned, while the words "I" signify the same Being qualified by the presence in one's body. In that case, there results the futility of the difference between the two statements, constituted by the use of the pronouns of the First and Second Person-"I" and "Thou"-placed earlier and later, along with the corresponding verbal forms, "asmi (am)" and "asi (art)", in "Tvam vaham asmi, aham vai tvam asi, (I am, verily, Thou; Thou, verily, art I)". Since, even through one statement, the nondifference of the internal ruler of one-self from Parameśvara results, there also follows the futility of the other (statement). Nor do the two sentences serve the purpose of confirming the cognition of non-difference; for, there being no erroneous notion of difference between the internal ruler and Parameśvara, as (there is) between the finite self and Parameśvara, there is no need for bringing about that confirmation. Hence, it is concluded that (the meditation) is enjoined here for the purpose of confirming the (sense of) non-difference by removing the doubt as to difference or non-difference, through the interchange of objects (of contemplation), i.e., of the non-difference of Parameśvara from one-self, and the non-difference of one-self from Parameśvara. Similarly of the Aitareya text also "What is I, that is He, what is He, that is I."

To the devotees who understand thus, the Supreme Brahman 3.154 though different from them, bestows His grace by granting His own form. "They in turn, teach their pupils, through (texts like) 'That Thou art,' that, though different, (Brahman is) of their own form." Of the text "That Thou art", the co-ordinate relation is not that of the body and the embodied. From the use of the word "art", it follows that therein is taught the non-difference of Paramesvara designated by the word "That", and previously described and defined as the cause of the world and so on, from what is designated by the word "Thou"; The word "Thou" refers but to the finite Self that is addressed, and does not extend to the internal ruler thereof; for, reference to one's internal ruler, as what is addressed, not being so well-known from one's own experience or the teaching of the ancients, as the reference to one's self, the term (Thou) is not capable of denoting that (the internal ruler). As for establishing that Parametvara, the Sat of the present context, has been taught earlier to be somehow one's own internal ruler, there arising no doubt as to their difference, the repeated teaching of that (their non-difference) is not needed.

Nor may it be objected that what is acceptable to the commen- 3.155 tary in the meditation of non-difference with Brahman is not real non-difference, but only imagined non-difference, as in the contemplation of non-difference with Garuda, that being cited as an illustration of the meditation of non-difference with Brahman, in the commentary on the prakṛtaitāvattva adhikaraṇa (III, 2, 21 et seq). For, the reality of non-difference is understood from the (following) statement in the Sastradreti sutra (I, 1, 31) "Of him who had attained Brahman-hood by the contemplation of the harmony of Brahman and the finite self", and the statement in the atmeti tupagacchanti section: "Though the being contemplated is a different entity (from the devotees, yet) the Supreme Brahman bestows His grace on the devotee conferring on them His own form'" (IV, 1, 3). If non-difference were not real, the declaration of an actual attainment thereof would not be appropriate. The clause "though the being contemplated is a different entity" means "though empirical difference does exist"; nor is there any contradiction in taking it to have the purpose of refuting even a possible ground of objection. Hence, it is that in the following words of the commentary on the vikārāvarti śūtra (IV, 4, 19), it has been proclaimed that the contemplation of one-self as Siva continues even in him who, in the world of Parama-Siva has attained union with Him, after the complete extinction of merit and demerit, the cause of all delusion etc. "Wandering about freely in the worlds of the (celestial) rulers from Sadasiva up to Brahmā, eating what he desires, taking on what forms he desires, rid of the desire of for human and other bodies, functioning with the three energies (iccha, jaana and kriya) uncontracted, (he) enjoys the splendour of perfect self-consciousness, immersed in the world, which is of one texture with the nature of Brahman, the harmony of Siva with Sakti, which abounds in Supreme Bliss, light and power. Thus it is that his perfect self-consciousness, as ensouling the entire world of enjoyer and enjoyment, is derived. from the text 'I am the food, I am the food, I am the food, I am the eater of the food, I am the eater of the food, I am the eater of the food' (Taitt. III, 10)." (It may be said that) identification in consciousness with the Supreme Being which, (as present in all bodies, directs all enjoyment and) enjoyers as (His) body, may come about of itself without standing in need of the contemplation of non-difference with Siva; for, by the expansion of the Intelligence of him who has attained union with Siva, the capacity to direct the world, present in the Being that pervades the Universe, is not aroused; (further), in the commentary on "Asantateścavyatirekah (And non-diflerence because of non-pervasiveness) "(II, 3, 48) and other sutras, there is shown in him the existence only of this kind of perfect self-consciousness; Though (this be so), yet it is not what is intended in the commentary on (this) sutra; the perfect self-consciousness is rather of Brahman alone, as determined by the force of the qualification applied to that self-consciousness, viz., "immersed in the world" which is of one texture with the nature of the Supreme Brahman What is stated there of the world is but its inclusion in the nature of Brahman, not its being His body. Of the liberated one, confirmed in the contemplation of identity with Siva, the continuance of that (consciousness) is declared till the falling off of the body; even at the time when he sings as he pleases, (I am the food, I am the food, etc.); seifod rante has man un to le stief ant to bis

The non-difference of Brahman from the finite self thus 3.16 shown to be acceptable to him, through the commentaries which elucidate the contemplation of non-difference, is also shown in a somewhat indirect way in the commentary on the sutra "Vadatīti cenna, prājno hi prakaraņāt (if it be said that it is declared, no; for the topic verily is of the Self)" (I, 4, 5), occurring in the anumānikādhikaraņa (I, 4, 1-7). The prima facie view in that section is that the unmanifest mentioned in the Kathavalli text "The Unmanifest is higher than the great one, the Person is higher than the Unmanifest." (Katha III, 11) being the pradhaus acceptable to the Samkhyas, the Samkhya system is based on the text cited. In "Ineyatvavacanacca (and on account of non-mention of being known)" (I, 4. 4), which is the secondary sutra directed to the refutation (of the above view), there is a further reason given in support of the final view. If this same text were the basis of the Samkhya doctrine; then the property of being a necessary object of knowledge to him who seeks released should have been declared of the pradhana, which is acceptable to the Samkbya, which declares release to result from discriminative knowledge of the Self, (Purusa), from Primordial Matter (Prakrti). That is not here stated. Hence, it is to be noted that the Samkhyan doctrine is not based on that (text): For, it is not reasonable that in that: which is the basis of a branch of knowledge, there should be no mention of what is described in that branch of knowledge.

property of having to be known; for the Katha Valli Sruti, verily, in the hymn." Soundless, touchless, formless, etc." (Katha, III, 15) declares of the Unmanifest (Avyakta) which is higher than the category of the Great One (Mahat) devoid of sound etc., that it is to be known of The cutra; "Vadatiti cenna," etc., (I, 4, 5) refers to this fresh Samkhya doubt and serves to refute it. In that hymn (Katha, III, 15) Parameśvara is declared, not the pradhāna, the context being of Parameśvara alone. In the commentary, where, to show the mode of refutation, based on the context relating to Paramesvara a text from the context relating to Paramesvara should be cited, there is cited the hymn "The wise one should suppress speech in the mind, sink that into sentient intellect: sentience he should suppress in the Great Self and that (again) in the peaceful Self" (Katha, III, 13). This is how the commentary on that sutra (proceeds); "If it be said that being known is declared in the later hymn 'Soundless, touchless, formless, undecaying, tasteless, eternal, odourless, beginningless, endless, higher than the Great One, and constant, realising that, one escapes the jaws of Death' (Katha, III, 15), no, (we reply), since the earlier discourse is about the Prajña alone, as seen from 'Yacced vang manas prājna, the wise one should suppress speech in the mind etc. (Katha, III, 13)". From the use of the word "Prajña" in that sutra, it appears as the natural sense of the words of the commentary that the present context relates to him who is referred to by the word "Prajña" in that hymn. The finite self desirous of release is referred to in that hymn by the word "Prajña", for, the injunctions as to the control of speech, mind, etc., are purportful only in regard to him. The context may also relate to the Supreme Self, since that is what is principally intended to be indicated in (the hymn) "The Unmanifest is greater than the Great One, the Person is greater than the Unmanifest; than the Person there is nothing higher, He is the goal, He (is) the final destination" (Katha, III, 11). This being the case, if the commentator had not at heart the non-difference of the finite self and Paramesvara, his citation of a word indicating the finite self, where a word belonging to the context (and) referring to the Supreme Self ought to have been cited, would be certainly unsuitable.

Now, even thus, how can there be absence of unsuitability, 3.16 when even by those who accept the non-difference of the finite self from Parameśvara, there is accepted, because of the empirical distinction between the two, a division among the Vedānta texts into those which concern the finite self and those which concern the Supreme Self? If (such an objection) be raised, it is met (as follows).

In the Katha Valli, to the question put by Naciketas about 3.162 the departed finite self, in the words, "There is this doubt, of a man, who is dead, some (saying) he is, others he is not; this, I would know, being taught by thee. Let this be the third of the boons" (Katha, I, 20),— a reply relating to the Supreme Self is given by Vaivasvata, in the words, "Realising through self-contemplation that resplendent Being, difficult to see, deeply hidden, located in the cave (of the heart), dwelling in the abyss, that ancient one, the wise one abandons joy and grief " (Katha, II, 12). It is quite certain that the question relates to the departed finite self, that being the conventional sense of the word "preta". That the question relates to the departed finite self is also made clear by the words of Vaivasvata "These damsels with their chariots and their lutes - such ones are not obtained by mortals. Be waited on by these, given by me. Do not question about death, O Naciketas" (Katha, I, 25). (There are also the following grounds to support that conclusion): Naciketas in the words "In respect of which there is this doubt, tell us what that is in the great hereafter" (Katha, I, 29), again asks for the answer to the very question of his, which had been condemned by Vaivasvata as inauspicious, because of its relating to death; subsequently, Vaivasvata begins his teaching only after criticising the position of "some (who say) he is not (after death)", in the words "The other world appears not to the puerile fool, dazed by the delusion of the wealth; believing that there is no world other than this, he repeatedly falls into my clutches" (Katha, II, 6); and later on is seen a reply relating to the incidents directly connected with the departed finite self, in the verse: "Behold! I teach thee, O, Gautama, the mysterious Brahman, the constant one, as also what becomes of the self after death. According to their deeds and according to their knowledge, some enter into wombs and are embodied, (while) others become immovable objects" (Katha, V, 3 and 7).

Similarly, it is also certain that the reply beginning with, "That, difficult to behold "etc., relates to the Supreme Self; for, after the question, it is said by Vaivasvata in the words "Even the gods have had doubts about this, of yore; subtle is this topic, not easy to know. Choose some other boon, O Naciketas, press me not, (but) set me free (from granting this boon)" (Katha, I. 21), that the reply to the question relates to a very difficult matter, such as cannot easily be stated. Thereupon Naciketas prays that only what he asked for should be explained to him, (saying), "O! Lord of Death, thou sayest that even the gods, verily, have had doubts about this, and that it is not easy to know. Another teacher of it cannot be found equal to thee; nor is there any other boon equal to this " (Katha, I, 22). Desiring to test the firmness of his capacity (for the knowledge prayed for), Vaivasvata, in the words beginning with "Choose sons and grandsons, who will live to be a hundred, plenty of cattle, elephants, gold and horses; ask for a wide extent of earth, and live thyself as long as thou desirest", and ending with "O! Naciketas, question not about Death" declares the gain of sons etc., to be objects of human desire worthier than what was questioned about. In spite of this, Naciketas, in words beginning with "Fleeting (are these), O! Lord of Death, they wear out the vigour of the senses of man. All life is but brief. Thine alone be the chariots, thine the song and the dance", (Katha I, 26) and ending with "Understanding the pleasure of song and love (to be thus ephemeral), who would delight to live 1881 long?" (Katha, I, 28), condemns these pleasures as of doubtful (permanence), though praised by (Yama) himself, and as leading to the diminution of the vigour of the senses, under-rates the life of all beings even from long-lived Brahma down to a small insect, as (lasting) but for a brief period, and prays that what was questioned about should be expounded. Seeing the firmness of his capacity (for the inquiry), Vaivasvata distinguishes the two kinds of fruit attaching to the goal of human endeavour, viz., beatitude and the accomplishment of desired objects, as the good and the pleasant; then, discriminating between those two and saying that the wise one chooses the good, the fool the pleasant, and so on, he praises the boon chosen by Naciketas; he (further) praises Naciketas, in respect of the desire for knowledge and the strength of renunciation helpful thereto, in the words "I hold Naciketas to be desirous of knowledge; desires manifold could not shake thee " (Katha, II, 4); then, after refuting the doctrine that the body is the self, through the words "No hereafter" etc., he declares the difficulty of realising the Self that is to be taught, in the words " Him even to hear of whom is not gained by many, Him, whom many, even though they hear, know not, he who teaches (Him) is a marvel; he who attains Him is skilful; he who knows (Him, when) instructed by the able, is (also) a wonder" (Katha, II, 7). Then follow the words That, difficult to behold" and so on. (The above analysis provides a further ground for holding that the reply relates to the Supreme Self). Thus, it being seen that to a question about the finite self, a reply is given about the Supreme Self, it is inferred that the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman is the view of the Sruti, as otherwise, there would result lack of congruity between question and answer.

Now, let it be that the reply relates to the Supreme Self. It does not stand to reason that the question relates to the existence or non-existence of the departed finite self; for, Naciketas has Otherwise, his query "Father, to already faith in its existence. whom wilt thou give me?" prompted by the object of remedying the fault of deficiency in the father's sacrifice, his departure of his own will to the world of Yama, in order to prevent the evil of falsehood from attaching to his father, who had said "I give thee unto the Lord of Death ", his own words "like cereals the mortal decays, like cereals he is born again," (Katha, I, 6), his asking as a boon for the knowledge of the fires whose fruit is heaven, these do Further, even if there be really non-difference not harmonise. between the finite and the Supreme Self, to the question about the existence or non-existence of the departed finite self, the reply should confine itself to that,—the teaching about the Supreme Self and the means of attaining Him being irrelevant; for, it is admitted even in the systems of those who maintain the non-difference of the finite self and the Supreme Self, that, to the questions relating to the incidents connected with the finite self, which occur in the question of Artabhaga, the Pancagni Vidya, and so on, the answers (too) relate only to that topic. Therefore abandoning the illegitimate desire to establish the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman, because of the principle of congruity of question and answer, the question and answer should be understood to relate to the existence or non-existence of the released soul; for, the word "pretya" is seen to be used of the released one in the text "na pretya samjñāsti, when he is liberated, there is no more consciousness" (Brh, II, 4, 12); further, the word "preta" may well have the force of "the released one", i.e., he, who by being drawn away from here (prakarṣeṇa itaḥ) has attained the destination from which there is no return. Thus, liberation being of the nature of the attainment of the world of the Supreme Self, called the Supreme Abode, the demonstration of the Supreme Self, of the attainment of His Supreme Abode, in the words, "he attains the end of the paths, that is the Supreme Abode of Viṣṇu" (Kaṭha III, 9), and of the means for (that attainment) all these fit in with that object (of liberation).

If this be urged, not so, (we reply); for, even if the question be imagined to relate to the incidents connected with the liberated one, the unsuitability of asking for a knowledge of the fires, helpful in procuring heaven, (remains) common (to both of us). What is meant there by the word "heaven" is but the world which is attained through the path of light etc., on the extinction of merit and demerit, and which is said to be the Supreme Abode attained by the released one, (whose existence is) in doubt. "In the the glories of the heavenly world are thus described: Thou art not there; heavenly world, there is no fear whatever; nor does one fear old age. Rising above both hunger and thirst, transcending sorrow, one enjoys in heaven" (Katha I, 12); then the teaching of the knowledge of the fires, helpful in attaining (that world) is prayed for thus: "And Thou knowest Agni, the means to heaven, O Lord of Death; teach that to me full of faith. (The Knowledge whereby) those whose abode will be heaven, attain immortality, that I ask as my second boon" (Katha I, 13); and Vaivasvata at the close of the teaching, in describing and praising the fruit (thereof), specifies the fruit—the attainment of heaven—as coming after the cessation of all the bonds of samsara (the migratory cycle): "He having first thrown off the shackles of Death, rising above Sorrow, enjoys in Heaven" (Katha I, 18). If a justification of the question (about the existence of the released soul) be attempted, on the ground that its object is to strengthen the faith in the existence of released souls, originally gained through the words of well-wishers, and to know further details (about them), then, even so may the question about the existence of the departed soul be justified; hence, it is not right to abandon the reference to the existence or non existence of the departed finite self, this being arrived at both by the conventional sense of the word "preta" and the natural sense of (the words) "question not about death", which occur later. Even here, (in our experience) are seen persons who, settled in the observance of duties pertaining to the (attainment of the) other world, because of their faith in the words of well-wishers, still inquire as to what is the basis for the view that the self is but the body, and how it is to be refuted. In the Sastras studied by those who perform Vedic rites, after a due study of the Vedas, there is seen the view of the self being but the body as also the basis of its refutation. If it be said that, even so, the question being about the existence or non-existence of the departed finite self, the existence thereof alone should be stated in the reply, and that the demonstration of the nature of the Supreme Self and of the means of attaining Him, do not fit in, no (we reply), for, if the question be about the existence or non-existence of the released one, his existence alone, should be mentioned; the irrelevance of the demonstration (of the Supreme Self) is common, therefore, even to the other view; (for there is not, indeed, seen in the description of the path of the Fathers and so on, relating to incidents connected with the departed finite self, any description of the Moon attained thereby, or the means of attaining thereto. If, on the ground of there being, in the answer, a description of the Supreme Self and the means of attaining to Him, it be postulated that the significance of the question about the existence or non-existence of the released one, extends up to that (attainment), then since, in the answer is seen the demonstration of the non-difference of the finite and the Supreme Self, it may be postulated, in conformity with the natural sense of the word "preta," that the significance of the question about the existence or non-existence of the departed finite self extends up to that non-difference. There is, indeed, the demonstration of that non-difference in such places as the following: "What is here, the same is there, what is there, the same is here. From death to death he goes, who sees any difference here " (Katha. IV, 10). Nor can it be said that difference is denied only as between Parameśvara as known here in the body and as known there in the solar orb etc., and not as between the finite self known in the body and Paramesvara that exists in the solar orb etc., for, there is no occasion for difference in Paramesvara, on the ground of difference in place. So also after teaching the identity of the finite self and Brahman, through the hymn "The person of the size of the thumb" etc., (Katha. IV, 13), the error of the doubt "how can there be identity of those possessed of contrary attributes?" is declared by the hymn "As certainly as water rained down on a lofty place flows down the slopes, even so does one who sees things as distinct run after them alone " (Katha. IV, 14); to those who perceive that there are in the finite self and Brahman distinct attributes opposed to their non-difference, samsara, characterised by that same distinctness, continues. Thus, though a word belonging to the context and referring to the Supreme Self should have been cited in order to indicate in the above manner that the context is one which relates to the non-difference of the finite self and the Supreme (Self), not one relating to the finite self alone or to the Supreme (Self) alone, (and) though the citation of other hymns bearing on the (present) topic is possible, the hyun containing the word Prajna, in conformity with the words of the sutra "Prajno hi prakaranat (the Self because of the topic)" (1, 4, 5) is cited by the commentator, in the belief that the composer of the sutras, though he ought to have illustrated the subject of the topic by a word referring to the Supreme Self, has (actually) illustrated it by means of a word referring to that from which the subject of the context is to be desired to be expounded as non-different. The acceptability of the non-difference of the finite self and the Supreme (Self) is thus shown by an indirect statement, at the close of the explanation of what is acceptable to the text and the sutra.

So, too, in the first adhikarana (it is said as follows). The text "This Self is Brahman" (Brh. II, 5, 19), through the particle "this" teaches the very self, which is known to perception, to be Brahman. Therefore, where is the doubt here? This is the prima facie view as to the non-commencement (of the study) of the science, set up through showing the absence of any doubt in respect of Brahman, which is accepted as the object of the Sastra. In the refutation (of this view), instead of establishing the difference between the finite self and Brahman, like other commentatios intent on the difference between the two, he (thus) explains the doubt as finding an object in the doubt as to the significance of the texts (which declare the existence) of difference and of non-difference: "When the text 'This Self is Brahman' and so on declares this same migratory being bound in self-consciousness to be Brahman, even from that, (there arises) the doubt. Brahmanhood, verily, is the possession, in excess, of the grandeur of unexcelled knowledge, Bliss and Power, free from all disturbance by any evil; while finite self-hood is the condition of putting up with boundless suffering, in bondage to the function of entering and leaving various bodies suitable to the enjoyment of the fruit of the variegated Karma, which, resting on the impressions of beginning-less ignorance, has (since) expanded. Why should there not be this doubt 'How do the texts declare one-ness of these two entities with mutually repellent characteristics?'". Thereby is manifested his intention not to deny the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman.

Why elaborate? In the commentary, it is loudly proclaimed in almost all places, that the Cit-Sakti of Brahman is non-different from the worlds, being of the form of all the worlds. So, too, the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Brahman, is loudly proclaimed everywhere. How is it possible to avoid the final conclusion thus resulting, as to the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman?

Let this be so. What is said of Cit-Sakti being of the form of all the worlds, that is favourable only to qualified non-dualism; for, through that is reached the truth of the non-difference therefrom even of the non-intelligent world of ether etc., as of the intelligent world. If being of the nature of all the worlds were declared to be of the nature of non-difference from Cit-Sakti, in the case of intelligent beings, and illusory appearance thereof in the case of non-intelligent beings, then, indeed, would pure non-dualism result. It has not been so declared. Its being of the form of all the worlds has been established in the praktyadhikarana (I, 4, 23, et seq) etc., only as transforming itself into the world. Nor is there declared the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Brahman; even if stated anywhere, it is (only) figurative. Hence it is that in the janmadi section (I, 1, 2), it is said, (in the following words), that the co-ordination of Bliss and Brahman in the Bhrgu Valli is figurative. "That, indeed, which being praised in the words 'within that is the Self composed of Bliss', is demonstrated to be characteristic of Supreme Brahmn, in the words, 'that is one Bliss of Brahman', because of the unsurpassable supremacy resulting from the repetition beginning with 'this is the inquiry into Bliss',-that itself, because of abundance, is spoken of figuratively as Brahman, in the words 'Bliss is Brahman'." As for the difference between Brahman and Cit-Sakti, that is exhibited in many places. For instance, in the aksara section (I, 3, 9), in commenting on the inferential ground provided by the sutra, viz., supporting (everything) up to (and inclusive of) ākāśa, difference as between support and what is supported is shown (to exist) between Brahman and Cit-Sakti, this (latter) being referred to by the word akasa in the words of the Gargi Brahmana, "In this aksara, O Gargi, akasa is woven as warp and woof" (Brh. III, 8, 11). In the dahara section (I, 3, 13, et seq) in the words "the ether within that is small; what is within that is to be sought" (Ch. VIII, 1, 1), the difference between Cit-Sakti and the Supreme Brahman-which are spoken of as the small ether and what resides therein, is exhibited by their being designated as the seat and what is seated. Though in the section "Ākāśo arthantaratvādi vyapadeśāt (Ākāśa is Brahman, on account of the mention as another entity and so on)" (I, 3, 42, et seq), it is not made clear that the term akasa occurring in the Chandogya text "What is called akasa, verily, is the sustainer of name and form; what is within that is Brahman, the Immortal, the Self" (Ch. VIII, 14, 1), refers to Cit-Sakti, yet that reference is made clear by the following sentence (occurring) in the janmadi sutra (I, 1, 2), while commenting on the text "Brahman embodied in ākāśa" (Taitt. I, 6): "The Supreme material causality of the resplendent expanse of Intelligence (Cidakasa) results from such texts as 'all these beings verily originate from the ākāśa alone' (Ch. I, 9, 1), 'what is called ākāśa verily, is the sustainer of name and form' (Ch. VIII, 14, 1) and so on ". There, the difference between Cit-Sakti and the Supreme Brahman, referred to by the words akasa and Brahman-is manifested by the mention of the (different) qualities of sustaining name and form, and being untainted by them. In the prakttyadhikarana too (I, 4, 23 etiseq), while commenting on the sutra "Parinamat (because of transformation)" (I, 4, 27) introduced to answer the doubt "how can the Supreme Siva, undisturbed by even a trace of any evil, the boundless ocean of auspicious qualities, endowed with powers uncontracted and ever-realised, transcending the world, function as the material cause of the world, which is to be condemned as the abode of ignorance and change?", he exhibits as follows the literal sense of that sentence in the sutra which mentions the inferential ground. "The taking on of the form of the world, as its material cause, is consistent in the case of Paramesvara, the efficient cause, though He is possessed of eternally pure Bliss and an unsurpassable auspicious nature; for He transforms Himseif into the form of what is intelligent and non-intelligent"; he then raises the doubt "Alas! transformation, verily, is of the nature of a causal change; the abandonment of a prior form and the obtaining of another constitute transformation. If it. be asked how Paramesvara is reserved from this detrimental characteristic etc.," and gives the mysterious reply "transformation takes place in such a way that there is no taint of change in the efficient cause, though (functioning as) the material cause "thereby again creating the desire (thus expressed): "What is this wonderful transformation? We are eager to hear of it; pray expound "; then, after promising the reply with the words " Listen, we shall expound", and explaining the "Yada tama" hymn (Svet. IV. 18). he makes out that the transformation of the Supreme Brahman being opposed to (His) immutability takes place though His Cit-Sakti of the form of Prajna, and not in his own nature; by the distinction thereby established between transformability and nontransformability, their difference is exhibited. If their non-difference be recognised, the changeability accepted in the case of Cit-Sakti, should be acknowledged even of Brahman; hence an incurable contradiction of the conclusion about his unchangeability. Therefore, the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman does not result from the mention everywhere of Cit-Sakti (taking on) the form of the world. To say that that results because of some few characteristic marks cited in the aniyama and other sections is but (evidence of) an illegitimate desire. For, it is not possible in the case of an interpretation condemned with the authority of the, sutras in many places, to support (it) merely by showing a few characteristic marks. If it be thus objected, it is said (in reply, as follows).

Brahman mentioned in the aniyama and other sections, there resulted contradiction of the proof of the doctrine of transformation, then, indeed, would the former have to be discarded, by some such postulate as that it refers to an opinion other than his own.

But there is no such contradiction (resulting) thereby. Indeed, the establishment of transformation is but helpful to the doctrine of illusion. Only from connecting the world with Brahman as the transformation of the latter and from the denial of that (i.e. the transformation) does it follow that it (the world) is an illusory manifestation of Brahman. Hence it is that in the text "That desired 'may I become many'", there is first shown the evolution of the world from Brahman. In Samkara's commentary too, after first showing in the bhoktrapatti section (II, 1, 13; S) that the world is a transformation of Brahman, by the denial (thereof) in the later arambhana section (II, I, 14 et seq; S), its being an illusory manifestation of Brahman is taught. Again, in the upasamhāra (II, 1, 24; S) and the krtsna prasakti (II, 1, 26; S) sections, he brings about intellectual assent to the doctrine only of the world being a transformation of Brahman, by answering the objections that occur (thereto). In the following verses of the Samksepa SarIraka too, in conformity with the commentary (of Samkara), it is elaborately shown of the doctrine of transformation that it is helpful to the doctrine of illusion. "The disputants argue, basing themselves only on the doctrine of origination (Tarkika), collocation (Buddhist), transformation and illusion. Refuting the views of origination and collocation, the Great Sage takes up the two (other) views as acceptable. Of these, taking up, at first, the doctrine of transformation, introducing the bhoktrapatti sutra (II, 1, 12; S) in order to answer the objections thereto, he proceeds to preserve the empirical world, in as much as it is (a necessary) auxiliary to the injunctions ranging about duty and the rest. (Then) arriving at the doctrine of illusion which is directly acceptable to him, he holds to it, (but only) with an eye to the former (doctrine). The doctrine of illusion may be based on texts like 'vācārambhanam' etc., (Ch, VI, 1, 4) only when the doctrine of transformation first arises (from them); only by getting up on the first step is it possible to rise to a higher one; so too, the Sactra, in respect of the notion of cause and effect. Having first declared transformation, now it denies that, to secure the unreality of change. In the Vedanta, the prior ground of the doctrine of illusion is the doctrine of transformation. (While) resting thus on the doctrine of transformation, the doctrine of illusion arrives of itself. Just as people having acquired the means, obtain what the means lead to (i.e., what they desire), so, too, do the Great Sage and the texts declare the doctrine of transformation, in order to reach to the doctrine of illusion " (Samksepa Sarīraka, Chapter II, verses 57-62)". " Having declared (the doctrine of) transformation, through texts like may I be many, may I grow forth (Ch. VJ, 2, 3), the Sruti then leads on to the doctrine of illusion, in order to declare the unreality of change." (Ibid, Ch. II, verse 67). In the commentary of the Acarya (Srikantha) too, of the perception ef the pot exists flete, sit is shown through the exclusion of the reality of the world as its basis, that it has another basis of the nature of identity with the material cause; (this is) for the purpose of reminding (one) of the fact that the elaboration of the doctrine of transformation is in order to help towards the acceptance of the doctrine of illusion. Hence, it is but proper (to hold) that the proof of transformation is undertaken only as an aid to the acceptance of the doctrine of illusion! reason to rebro mi (8; 91, 1, 1)

As for what is said of the non-declaration of the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Brahman, that does not follow; for, the statement thereof is seen in many places. Thus, indeed, in the ākāśasment tallingāt section (1, 1, 23), after mentioning the text "What is the essence of this word? He said ākāśa" (and so on) the conclusion is established that ākāśa is not elemental ether, but Paramesvara; then is raised the doubt as to what is the object of using the word "elemental", in his own statement about "elemental ether", and the purpose of that (word) is stated thus: "since creatorship of all beings is true of the Supreme akasa, the supreme material cause, (the use of the word 'elemental' in the other case): is purposeful '; then, the further doubt being raised as to how, if creatorship of all beings could hold even of the Supreme ākāśa, this ākāśa could be determined to be Parameśvara, the reply is given "because (it) is non-different from that (Paramesvara)". In the dahara section (I, 3, 13, et seq), after proof of the conclusion that the small ether-mentioned in the Chandogya text, "Therein is the small ākāśa; what is within that is to be sought after" (Ch. VIII, 1, 1) -is Parameśvara, this doubt is raised: "according to another text 'He who rests within this akasa in the heart, controller of all, lord of all' (Brh. IV, 4, 22) and so on, (only) He who is to be meditated on as within the small ākāśa, can be Parameśvara. How then can the small ākāśa, be said to be Paramesvara?"; and the solution is given thus: "even here, (in the case of the Brhadaranyaka text) Paramesvara, He who resides in the middle of the small akasa is to be contemplated; further, since of the qualities of Paramesvara, such as freedom from sin etc., connection with the small akasa is declared, even the small ākāśa (is to be contemplated), as His form of the effulgent expanse of Intelligence (Cidambara)" (I, 3, 16). section "Sarvatraprasiddhopadeśāt" (I, 2, 1) while explaining Brahman's (property of) being signified by all terms, the properties of being of the essence of Brahman and being His attribute as of the form of all His qualities are declared of Cit-Sakti, in the following words: "It follows from the authority of Sruti, Smrti, Lihasas, Puranas and the maxims of the learned that the selfcontained Supreme Energy, of the form of Supreme Power in all the worlds, intelligent and non-intelligent, possessing existence of the form of supreme wisdom and bliss, devoid of the limitations of space and time, becomes both the essence and the attribute of Apart from that, there does not Siva, the Supreme Brahmn. come about for Brahman the possession of the properties of omniscience, omnipotence, originating all, controlling all, being contemplated by all, bestowing grace on all, and being the cause of the (attainment of the) spiritual goal by all. Further, even the property of being designated by names indicative of supremacy such as, Maheśvara, Śiva, Mahādeva, Rudra and so on does not come about." Similarly in the adhyanadhikarana (III, 8, 14) too, there is established the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from Brahman So too, in the section " Anandadayah pradhanasya (Blisss and so on, as belonging to the subject, have to be understood everywhere)" (III, 3, 11), it is made clear (1) that the host of qualities such as unexcelled knowledge, bliss and the rest, and the possession of a distinctive form qualified by blue-throatedness etc., (which constitute) the essential differentia of Brahman, are all of them to be understood in every meditation on Brahman, in spite of difference of topic, (2) that thereby Brahman, distinct from all others such as Brahma, Vianu etc., enters into experience, as if grasped by the horns, like the lunar orb which is different from all other planets, asterisms and stars by its superior brightness, and that consequently, like the continuance of that luminous brightness in all perception of the Moon, the continuance of qualities like knowledge, bliss and the rest and of the distinctive form is (but) proper in all meditations of Brahman. After this, in the section "Priyasirastvadyapraptirupacayapacayau hi bhede: having joy for its head and so on are not established, because of increase and decrease consequent on difference (III, 8, 12)," the doubt is raised whether in the understanding of the unsurpassable knowledge well-known to be characteristic of Brahman, from such texts as "along with the Intelligent Brahman '' (Taitt. II, 1,) and "He who knows all, he who understands all" (Mu. II, 2, 7), there should be understood the secondary goals qualities of having joy for the head etc., (which are) well-known from the text " within that there is another Self, the Self of Bliss; joy is its head and so on" (Taitt. II, 5), in the same way as there is understanding of the secondary qualities of having purposes which come true and so on; and it is made clear (1) that though joy etc. are specific modes of Bliss, their being the head etc. is (but) imagined in the meditation for facility of comprehension of the unsurpassability of Brahman's Bliss, and is not real, (2) that if Brahman's Bliss really possessed a head and so on, then to His form of Bliss, there would result increase and decrease (of the nature of) occasional stoutness and occasional thinness, (3) that if such modes of existence as support and what is supported were real, difference would result, and (4) that consequently, those 881 8 characteristics of knowledge and bliss, like omniscience, having purposes which come true, having desires which are satisfied etc., which, through (their) imperishability are equal to Brahman's nature, and are also of the form of the fruit obtained by released ones, as possessing forms equal to Brahman, those alone should be understood in all meditation on Brahman, not the property of having joy for the head and so on.

After that, in the section "Ādhyānāya prayojanābhāvāt (for 3.1831 meditation, there being no other purpose)" (III, 8, 14), the prima facie view is stated that though in the understanding of the unsurpassable Bliss characteristic of Brahman, in all meditations of the Supreme, as stated in the expression "the Self of Bliss," its having joy as the head etc., is not understood, being (but) imagined for the comprehension of its unsupassability; yet, being within the four other sheaths consisting of food etc., should certainly be understood, (they being not imaginary).

This is refuted thus. The sheaths of food etc., are not to be understood, there being no purpose (served). They are not useful for liberation, that being secured by meditation on Siva, after abandoning all else. What is the object, then, of the mention of the sheaths of food etc.? For the purpose of meditation (adhyana); adhyana is direct, reverent meditation, and reverence comes from comprehension of superiority to all; the mention of the sheaths of food etc., is for the comprehension of that (superiority). Hence, for the purpose of comprehending superiority to all (which is) helpful in attaining excess of devotion, the sheaths of food etc., should be thought of as the determinants of superiority, even prior to the practice of meditation, (which) should follow the excess of firm devotion.

Now, the sheaths of food etc., being spoken of as the caves, are to be thought of not as the determinants merely of superiority, but also as the determinants of the quality of being within, which is thought of at the time of meditation. If it be said, therefore, that like the meditation of the Brahman-city and the heart lotus in the Dahara vidya for the purpose of meditating on Brahman as within the heart-lotus situated in the middle of the Brahman-city (i.e., the body), the thought of the sheath of food etc. is (also) constant on all occasions of meditation, no (we reply), because of the mention of the word "self" in the words "another self within" in every one of those hymns. If the sheaths of food etc. were non-intelligent entities of the nature of the body, the vital air, the mind and the intellect, then would they have to be thought of, like the Brahman-city etc., at the time of meditation; that, however, is not so; they, verily, are presiding (deities) of food etc., differentiations of intelligence and are of the nature of Brahma, Vienu, Rudra and Iśvara, the beings who, in the words of the Atharvasikhā "Brahmā, Visuu, Rudra, Indra, originate from Him" are declared to have been created by Siva; they, again, are those who, -because of (the words), which, after enjoining meditation on Siva thus, "The cause is to be meditated upon, the Being endowed with all lordly powers, the Lord of all, Sambu, in the middle of the akasa," say "Siva alone, the doer of what is auspicious, is to be meditated on, abandoning all else", are said to be excluded, because they have to be left out of the meditation, in the nature of an uninterrupted flow of thought about Siva, which is to be performed by him who desires release. Whence (this conclusion)? From the (use of the) word "Self" "in another self within" in every hymn, and from the teaching in texts like "he reaches this self consisting of food" and so on, about the special deities attained to, stage by stage, prior to the attainment of Brahman. Thus, in order to reach to the contemplation of the presence in the cave mentioned in the text "he who knows the one hidden in the cave" (Taitt. II, 1), and for the comprehension of the superiority resulting from the description of the cave, and what is within that (cave), their contemplation is necessary; for that reason alone, in texts like "this self consisting of food" etc., it is declared of those who attain the fruit mentioned in the text "he who knows Brahman attains the highest", that, as the fruit of meditation on them (Brahmā etc.,) there is attainment of them (Brahmā etc.,); though this be so, the superiority resulting from the description of the cave and what is within the cave, like the superiority resulting from stories of the destruction of the Tripura and so on, should be understood only prior to the commencement of the meditation. Though the contemplation of these, which are helpful in the contemplation of the presence within the cave, should be performed every day, yet that contemplation should be performed even prior to the commencement of the contemplation of Siva, each earlier stage being abandoned stop by step in the order of its attainment; (this is so) because of the injunction to abandon in "abandoning all else", because the absorption of each earlier stage step by step in the later one is well-known in the Saiva Agamas, and because in the chapter on meditation in the Yoga Yājñavalkya, after prescribing meditation step by step on Brahma and the rest, it is said in the same tenour, "O Gargi, this is said by the excellent ones among those who know Brahman; absorbing the various effected forms such as Brahmā and the rest in their respective causes, with mind concentred, the self is to be united to Parameśvara." Thus, at the time of commencement of the meditation on Siva, only that has been translated as "the description of the cave and what is within the cave". The expression tadvat, i.e., guhavat, may mean either what possesses the cave, i.e., what is within it (as here understood) or what is like the cave; in the latter case the reference would be to the sheaths of food, breath, mind, and knowledge which are the cave as it were, within which is the supreme ākāśa, the seat of Brahman; on the former interpretation the reference would be to the Supreme Being. The reason for preferring this interpretation is the comparison of the description of the cave etc., to the story of the destruction of Tripura. Here Tripura samharanam is comparable to the guha; the samharanan is the Supreme Being; a similar interpretation for guhāvat seems, therefore, more suitable.

meditation is to be performed (which is) of the form of a stream of consciousness having Siva alone for its object; this should be preceded by meditation step by step on what are described as of the form of the cave and are referred to as the sheaths of food, vital air, mind, knowledge, i.e., Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara [or Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva, interpreting what is understood by the term "sheath of knowledge" and the term "Indra" of the Atharvaśikhā passage "Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Indra" etc., as referring to two—Īśvara and Sadāśiva—in conformity with the Siva Āgamas, the Yoga Yājnavalkya etc.]; and there should have been contemplation of the absorption of each earlier one in the later, and of Sadāśiva in the Supreme akāśa, (which is) of the nature of the seat of Siva. At the time of meditation on Siva, His being in the sheath of food etc., is not to be meditated on.

be meditated on, that being opposed to the injunction to abandon all else. In the text, "abandoning all else", Brahmā, Vinu, Rudra and Indra of the context being understood even by the expression "else", the superfluous word "all" has the significance resulting in the abandonment of all deities (whatsoever) except Siva. Nor may it be said that because of the non-difference from Siva of Umā, (who is) of the nature of Cit-Sakti referred to by the expression "Self of Bliss", there can be no possibility of that being the object of the injunction as to abandonment. For, from the expression "self" heard in the case of the sheath of food etc., being common even to the Self of Bliss, it is preferable to understand finite self-hood of the Self of Bliss, as of those (others).

If (such an objection) be urged, not so. The "self" under- 3 18332 stood in the Self of Bliss refers to the Supreme Self, not to the finite self as in the self of food etc., for, from the non-mention later of something else to be attained by him who has attained the Self of Bliss, as (there is) in the case of him who has attained the self of food etc, it follows that the attainment (of the Self of Bliss) is liberation. So, too, of the word "self" which is taught to be common to the finite self and the Supreme (self), in the words " Self' (is used in the sense of) the finite self, strength, the body, nature and the Supreme Self", it is proper to adopt whatever sense is suitable (to the context). Nor may it be thought, that since in the Anandayalli the word "self" is invariably seen to refer to the finite self, the sense of the context (should prevail here too). The reference to the finite self being incompatible with the reference to the cause of the world in "from the self, ether originates" (Taitt. il, l), a reference to the Supreme Self has necessarily to be declared; in the case of the Self of Bliss too, a similar reference to the Supreme Self is intelligible. there being no difference (between the two), in respect of the characteristic marks or the contradiction of the sense of the context. Hence, Uma being non-different from Siva, the contemplation of the former is not contradicted, at the time of the meditation of the latter. in the to trust appear and at an analysis

3.18333 Now, if Sakti, referred to by the expression, "Self of Bliss", and admitted to be of the form of all the world—Intelligent and Non-intelligent—be non-different from Siva, then of all Intelligent beings non-distinct from that (Energy), non-difference from Siva being inevitable, of Brahmā and the others too, referred to by the words "self of food "etc., non-difference from Siva should be declared, because of their connection with the word "self", which in the previous and succeeding sentences has been determined to refer to the Supreme Self: of them too, as of Umā, contemplation at the time of the meditation of Siva should not be contradicted.

If this be said, no (we reply), because in (the text), "Sive 3.18334 alone is to be meditated on, the door of what is auspicious, abandoning all else" (Atharvasikha), the property of being contemplated is limited to Siva alone. If Brahma and others are not the objects of that exclusion, what can be its object? Not the Non-intelligent world, nor the Intelligent world other than Brahma etc., under reference, because of the natural denotative power of the general name "else (anya)". (For, the term) refers to other Intelligent beings, like Siva, the correlate (of the exclusion), just as in the statement " in the rest there is similarity to the Syens rite" which is made after prescribing certain special rites as the elements of the Isu sacrifice, the reference of the expression "the rest" is to the (other) special rites because of similarity to the Isu special rites which are the correlates (of that expression); (hence), there must necessarily be a reference to Brahma etc., the other intellicent beings who are thus in our thoughts. Though, in consonance with proximity to the term "all," (the term "else") is common to the other intelligent beings as well, the refer rence to Brahma and other intelligent beings that have entered our thoughts cannot be got rid of; further, even in the case of other intelligent beings, the inappropriateness of (the exclusion) referring to them is common, they too being non-different from Siva, like Brahma and the rest. Therefore, the abandonment of seas a what is really different from Sive is not here enjoined, but of what appears to be different from Siva. Hence, too, one's own self, (which), in meditation on Brahman, (is contemplated) as nondifferent from Siva, in the form "I am Siva", is not to be abandoned; (and) because of the appearance of the difference of the selves of food etc., both from Siva and among themselves, (as seen) from the declaration "another self within" in each hymn, their exclusion cannot be helped. As for Uma, though spoken of in the relationship of abode and what abides, as the Supreme ākāśa, and in the relationship of Attribute and Substance, in (the text) " It is one Bliss of Brahman", yet difference is mentioned (only) of the form of abode and of the form of unsurpassed Bliss, not of the intelligent Being of the nature of Ambika; of that form, non-difference alone is declared. For, (in) the anandadhikarana (III, 3, 11) is established the understanding of the "Person, dark and tawny," in all meditation; from the expression "dark and tawny" (there are declared) of Siva alone dark colour in respect of the form of Ambika, and tawny colour in respect of the male form; thereby (the section) is pregnant with the nondifference of Siva and Sakti. Hence, (it follows) that the selves of food etc., are not to be contemplated in the same manner as Uma, at the time of the meditation on Siva. Thus (is) this section set out in the four sutras "Adhyanaya prayojanabhavat (for meditation, there being no other purpose)", "Ātmaśabdācca (because of the expression 'self')", "Ātmagrhītiritaravaduttarāt (the understanding of 'self', as in other places, because of what follows)", and "Anvayaditi cet syadavadbaranat (if it be said 'on account of connection', it may be so, on account of ascertainment)", referring to them is common, they too being nor(71 -11,8,11)

3-18335 It is shown in the commentary inquiring into the sense of the third of these sutras, that Cit-Sakti, of the form of the Self of Bliss, is but Siva, the Supreme Self, and not different therefrom. Nor may it be said that the commentary seeks to establish the Supreme Self-hood of the Self of Bliss—following the first of the positions set out in the anandamaya section (viz.,) that the Self of Bliss is Siva, the Supreme Self, and not, indeed, to establish the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from the Supreme Self, basing (itself) on the second interpretation set out in that section, viz., that the Self of Bliss is Cit-Sakti. For, on the basis of the first position, since it follows even from the anandamaya section that the Self of Bliss is is the Supreme Self, the establishment of that (view) here is unnecessary; and it is also understood clearly from the janmadi sutra (I, 1, 2) that it is only the second of the positions set out in the anandamaya section that is acceptable to the commentator. Hence, it is quite consistent (to hold) that the non-difference of Sakti from Siva is made clear by the commentator in the adhyana section (III, 3, 14-17).

Similarly, its non-difference from Siva is described in the 3.1834 section "Īkṣati karma vyapadeśāt saḥ (He, being designated as the object of sight)" (I, 3, 12). There, while saying in reply to the question of Satyakama, "The syllable AUM is verily the higher and the lower Brahman" (Prasna, V, 2), after mentioning the fruit of the meditation on the pranava with one moment, viz., the attainment of the world of human beings reached by the Rk verses, which are of the nature of the first moment, and the fruit of the meditation on the pranava of two moments, viz., the attainment of the iniddle space reached by the Yajus verses, which are of the nature of the second moment, it is said, "He, again, who meditates on this Supreme Self with the syllable 'AUM' of three moments, being relieved of sins, even as the serpent of its slough, is led up by the Saman verses, to the world of Brahma; he perceives there the Supreme Person, the dweller in the city, who is higher (even) than the collective form of all these living beings" (Prasna, V, 5). The position that is acceptable finally is that "the world of Brahma" there is the world of Siva, the Supreme Brahman, and the person seen in that (world) is Siva.

To that end is set forth the (following) prima facie view: "The world of Brahma is the world of Vignu, for, in the later hymn 'by Rks this world, by Yajus the middle space, by the Samans that which the eclightened ones know' (Praina, V, 7), which summarises the sense declared (earlier), one is reminded, in connection with the world of Brahma, of the property of being experienced by enlightened ones, which (in another context) is understood of the world of Vignu, through the hymn 'the enlightened ones constantly perceive that Supreme Abode of Vignu, 'T, S-I, 3, 2a). Hence, the person seen therein is but Vignu."

This is how that (prima facie view) is refuted in the conclusion, through the explanation of that (text): "As for the reference to the 'Supreme Abode of Vienu', there is no contradiction in (holding) that that which is other than the form of the world, of the nature of Bliss unexcelled, of the form of the Supreme Abode of Vienu, that itself is the Supreme Brahman, called Siva, for the reason that between Vienu and Siva, there is no essential difference other than a difference of state, as between the material and efficient cause".

by the hymn "the Supreme Abode of Vinnu" etc., it should be shown of that hymn only that it refers to Sivaloka, not that it refers to Sivaloka, not that it refers to Siva. Hence it is that in the commentary on the section "Karyam Badarir asya gatyupapatteh (To the caused, opines Badari, going being appropriate in that case)" (IV, 3, 6, et seq), the Katha Valli hymn "he reaches the end of the path, that is the Supreme Abode of Vinnu" (Katha III, 9) is shown to refer to the world of Siva. It is not possible to show that the hymn "the Supreme Abode of Vinnu" etc., refers to Siva, holding to the present commentary (on I, 3, 12). It is not indeed the commentator's conclusion that Siva is directly of the nature of Vignu who is of the form of the universe. It is shown, rather, in the commentary on the prakṛtyadhikaraṇa (I, 4, 28 et seq) and elsewhere, that he is but a mode of Siva Sakti, Supreme Bliss of the form of Siva Sakti, being his essential nature.

Hence, the sense of that commentary should be understood 3.18352 in the following way: by the words "that which is other than the form of the world, of the nature of Bliss unexcelled, of the form of the Supreme Abode of Visnu," Cit-Sakti the material cause of the mode Visna, who transforms himself into the form of the world, is referred to; it is that that functions even as the world of Parama Siva; in this way is shown the reference of the hymn about "the Supreme Abode of Vianu" to the world of Siva. By the words "That itself is the Supreme Brahman called Siva" is declared the non-difference of that (Cit-Sakti) from the nature of Siva. Now, in order to exhibit the absence of conflict with what is re-called, it should be said of the hymn about "the Supreme Abode of Visnu", only that it refers to Cit-Sakti, which takes on the form of the world of Siva; the statement of the non-difference of Cit-Sakti from the nature of Siva does not there fit in. There being this objection, in order to show the utility of that (statement), by removing the objection, there is the sentence beginning with " for the reason that between Vianu and Siva " etc. This is the objection that arises here: it cannot be that the supreme form of Vișnu is Śıva-Śakti, Vișnu being spoken of repeatedly in Puraqas and Itihasas, as non-different only from Siva. The reply is indicated through the following statements. For the very reason that there is no difference of nature of Vianu from Siva, even of Sakti that is of the form of the material cause of the mode Vienu, there is non-difference of nature from Siva; further, the identity of Siva's Sakti and Visnu is taught in the Kurma Purana' and elsewhere.

3.18353 Or else, this is the sense of the statement in the commentary, "That itself is the Supreme Brahman, called Siva". Here and there in Puranas and Itihasas, the Supreme Brahman taught by the entire Vedanta, the cause of all, He who is attained by the released ones, is designated as but the form of Visnu, the Supreme Abode of Visnu and the Supreme Abode called Visnu, as is seen from the (following) narrative of Narada in the Moksa Dharma Parva of the Mahabharata (ch. 205): having seen, on the slopes of the Himalayas, a certain virgin, and the persons with limbs studded with gems, with forms like that of the Sun, wearing jewels on their heads, who coming out of her mouth when she yawned, circumambulated her and re-entered her, Narada prostrated and asked her reverently "Who art Thou? Who are those three persons? What are the gems in their bodies? What is the radiance on their heads" Being told (by her) "I am Savitri: those three persons are the Vedas; the gems are of the form of sacrifices and their fruit, the sense of the Vedas; the radiance on the heads, the Great Shining Splendour taught by the Vedanta, that is not knowable even by me ", he worshipped the Lord Visnu for a hundred years to find out what the radiance was. Then looking at the Lord, who, pleased, appeared in front of him, and prostrating before Him with gratification, he asked Him "O Lord of the world, explain to me what is known by thee, O Acyuta; show me that Grace, Hṛṣīkeśa; I desire to hear that, O Hari ". He was then instructed by the Lord, thus: "What thou sawest on the heads of the Vedas, that is my form. Ascetics free from dualities and egotism, endowed with pure vision, they perceive me constantly. Ask them what thou desirest ". There, by the words

"my form", the form of Siva alone is mentioned, in the realisation of non-difference. Hence it is that though it is declared to be "my form", it is also said "ask them" in the view that there is some element of mystery (yet) to be questioned about. Therefore it is that of the form shown by the Lord as His own, the qualification of belonging to the Lord is mentioned even by himself, in the words of the Gītā, "Look at my union with the Lord", and "the Supreme form of the Lord" (Bh. G. XI, 8 and 9). Thus, the declarations in the Bharata of "the Supreme Abode of Vienu" Supreme Abode called Vișnu", which proceed on the realisation of the non-difference of Vișnu and Siva, are also seen to refer to Siva. On this view, the nondifference of Cit-Sakti from Siva must be taken to be described by the statements in the Iksatyadhikarana; for, Visnu, a special mode of Cit-Sakti, being non-different from Siva, the difference of Cit-Sakti therefrom is irreconcilable (therewith).

The existence of the Cit-Sakti of Paramesvara in this wise, 3.184 its non-difference from Paramesvara, its being even then His attribute, all these are established even in the Sāstras which are primarily non-dualistic (in their conclusion). Thus, indeed, in the Saṃkṣepa ŚārIraka, (it is said as follows): The true stainless energy of Paramesvara is called Cit-Sakti; the other inert energy is called Nescience (Avidyā). The world originates from the mutual intercourse of these two energies of the Lord. The Lord's Cit-Sakti, is transformed (as it were) by the unreal changing energy. Thus say some. Others, again, with some faith (in the Scriptural declaration of creation) say that this is acceptable to enlightened ones, in one sphere, but is not acknowledged in another. In the sphere of injunctions as to action and meditation, as enjoining them, it is acceptable; it is not recognised in the sphere of the Attributeless Real or in the consideration of Vedic texts relating thereto" (Chapter III, verses 228 and 229). The same sense is indicated in the Pancapadika by the statement "Bliss, Experience of Things, and Eternity are attributes. Though non-different from Intelligence, they appear as if different" (Vizianagaram Samskrt Series Edition, page 4).

Thus, because of the existence in Cit-Sakti of the property of 3.185 being an attribute, from the empirical peint of view, though (it is) non-different in essence, the teaching of difference as between Substance and Attribute and so on in the Gargi Brahmana, Dahara Vidya etc., is quite consistent. As for the statement in the janmadi-sūtra (I, 1, 2) "That is itself figuratively spoken of as Brahman, because of abundance", that is in the view that in a context pertaining to the statement of its being an attribute from the empirical point of view-as seen from its being referred to to as Attribute in the adjacent texts of the Anandavalli, "that is one Bliss of Brahman "-the relation of co-ordination should be interpreted figuratively, not in the view that there is difference from all points of view. Even thus should be understood the statement made as to the figurative application of the word denoting knowledge—as an attribute—to the Substance (itself), in the sūtra "Tadguņa sāratvāttu tadvyapadešah prājňavat (But the self is so designated because of that being its essential quality; as in the case of the intelligent Self)" (II, 3, 29).

Thus, the four-fold result,—viz., Brahman's Cit-Sakti being of the form of all the worlds, intelligent and non-intelligent, its being of itself of the essential nature of Brahman, its being of the form of the host of qualities pertaining to Him, and the unchanging nature of Brahman—is acceptable to the acarya (Srikantha).

That result does firmly indicate his ultimate view to be that Brahman is attributeless, unconnected with the world, non-different from the finite self, and of the nature of pure non-duality. If, verily, Cit-Sakti is non-different from Brahman, and that is itself of the nature of all His attributes, there are not any attributes of Brahman different from Him. It is rather He Himself that appears as attribute, because of an imagined difference. It thus follows that Brahman is in reality attributeless. The genuine relationship of Attribute and Substance is not indeed consistent with non-difference. Nor can it be said that like non-difference, difference also such as is consistent with genuine relationship of Attribute and Substance, is accepted by the ācārya (Śrīkantha); for, in the commentary on the ārambhana section (II, 1, 15, et seq) he discards the doctrine of difference and non-difference (bhedā-bheda), as self-contradictory.

Nor is there in the system of the ācārya, as in that of 3.191 Madhva, the acceptance of Viśera (specificity), which, though there is no difference between Attribute and Substance, takes the place of Difference. Nor even thereby can the relationship of Attribute and Substance be maintained to be genuine; for, since even by Madhvas it is admitted only as discharging the functions of Difference, there follows of it (Viśera) only (the properties of) appearing and being spoken of as Difference. If Viśera could do everything that Difference does, then, under the name Viśera, Difference alone would have been acknowledged (in the system). Hence, it is that in a work of Madhva's, known as Anuvyākhya, in the words "In destruction, there is difference also," 1 (it is) conceded (that) in the real threads, there is of the destructible cloth, etc., difference from the threads. In the commentary thereon, the Nyaya Sudha, the following doubt is raised: "Just as the differences which enter into our discourse and which would help (to establish the reality of) Difference, are said to be otherwise derived from the ground of Viśesa, even so it may be possible to bring about through Viśesa, non-existence in what exists; why then should difference and non-difference be admitted (in that case)?"; and it is answered thus: "Through the capacity of Viśesa to create empirical distinctions alone, it is not possible to bring about non-existence; if it did everything which Difference does, Viśesa would be Difference itself, not its deputy." Hence it is confirmed that in respect of Attributes, only the position of the Pañcapādikā, that "though non different from Intelligence, they appear as if different" is acceptable (to the commentator).

So, too, through the acceptance of non-difference from Brahman of Cit-Sakti which is of the form of the entire universe, it follows of the world of ether etc., that it is an illusory manifestation of that (Cit-Sakti). Or else, if it be admitted of the fleeting (world of) ether etc., that it is a transformation (of Cit-Sakti), there would result a contradiction of the unchanging nature of Brahman, who is non-different there-from (i.e., from Cit-Sakti).

Now, though Cit-Sakti and Brahman are really non-different, yet to support the relationship of Attribute and Substance, abode and that which abides, obtained from the Gārgi Brāhmaṇa, Dahara Vidyā, Ānanda Valli, etc., empirical difference should necessarily be admitted; only then is there consistency of the distinction which is made between Brahman and Cit-Sakti as non-changing and changing, in spite of the property of transformation admitted of Cit-Sakti. Though the finite self and Brahman are non-different, there is distinction between agency, enjoyment, etc., and the absence thereof. If it be said that so, too, (a distinction must be admitted here, (we reply) even thus, in the stage of final release sage through the cessation of empirical difference, the cessation must be declared of the world of ether etc., as of the agency, enjoyment etc., of the finite self; (hence), the conclusion that it is an illusory manifestation of Brahman cannot be helped. Therefore, in the manner stated in the Samkeepa Sariraka, the holding on to the doctrine of transformation in the commentary is in order to support action, meditation, etc., from the empirical view-point, and in order to provide an occasion for refuting it, that refutation being needed from the view-point of truth; hence, it is firmly established that only the view of Brahman's being unconnected with the world is acceptable (to Śrikantha). to winness ad . asaniggad has

Though Cit-Sakti is said to be of the form of the entire world 3.1922 of Intelligence, as of the form of the whole Non-intelligent world. it does not follow of the world of Intelligence that it is an illusory manifestation like ether etc., for, if that were so, that (world) ceasing through realisation of the truth, there would result nonexistence of the experience of the fruit of release; further, from the non-difference of that eternal (world) from Brahman, there would result a contradiction of the unchanging nature of Brahman.1 mot- a c'agrade out le nouvenissif on ed aredt aven

The text here is rather obscure. Following the not-tooclear text of Ananda Lahari, the present text reads: "nityasya tasya Brahmābhede Brahma nirvikāratva virodha prasangācca; " but at least two texts (A and O) read "virodhaprasangacca". On this reading, the sense would be "since from the non-difference of that eternal world from Brahman, there would not result any contradiction of the unchanging nature of Brahman". Prima facie, it is clear that from identity with what is eternal, there cannot result any conflict of the kind suggested. Identity in the case of material

3.1923 Now, the sutra " Parinamat (because of transformation) " in the prakttyadhikarana (I, 4, 23, et seq) is explained to mean "because of transformation into the form of the Intelligent and the Nonintelligent". It is also said that from the statement of the doctrine of transformation, the doctrine of illusion follows of itself. This is true. But yet the mention of Brahman's transformation in respect of the elment of Intelligence either refers only to the eternal existence of Intelligent Beings as modes of Brahman's Cit-Sakti or is made in the view that even in respect of Intelligent beings, through the medium of their own Cit-Sakti, there is transformation in the form of contraction and expansion of knowledge and happiness. The eternity of Intelligent beings in their own nature has been established in the section " Natma fruteh, nityatvacca tabhyah (the Self is not originated, on account of the statement of Scuti, and the eternity resulting therefrom)" (II, 3, 18). It is therefore firmly established that it is acceptable to the acarya (Srilkantha) that Brahman is attributeless, unconnected with the world, non-different from the finite self, and of the form of pure non-duality. der B mort of bown human tels do cocarefilioner and

Now, if, both from the empirical standpoint and that of release, there be no distinction of the ācārya's system from the doctrine of him who upholds (pure) non-dualism, why should a separate commentary be undertaken? If (this question) is asked, creation cannot be taken literally, just because of the non-eternal character of that world. There is no such difficulty in the case of the eternal world of Intelligence. Hence, there is no need here to explain identity as that of illusory manifestations with their substrate. This interpretation and the text suited thereto, seem more logical. The reading adopted in the text is less easily intelligible.

it is answered (as follows). The attainment of the nature of Brahman results, verily, from the intuition of the non-specific Brahman. That intuition is gained by the meditation thereon. By those who have not gained the firmness of intellect enabling them to meditate on that extremely subtle being, intellectual firmness is gained through the grace of that Being who is worshipped with firm devotion unintermittently for a long time, and who is endowed with endless auspicious qualities and a shining form; for, Sruti says "let him unite our intellects with auspicious Smrti (i.e. Knowledge)" (Svet. III, 1, 4) and Smrti declares "seek knowledge of Tsvara". Hence it is that the Khandanakara (SrI Hara) says: "This desire for (knowledge of) non-duality which rescues one from the mighty fear (of migration) arises in two or three men, if at all, only by the grace of the Lord " (Khandana-Khanda-Khādya, para 163, verse 25). The grace of God is obtained by meditation on Him, (as seen) from the Pauranic statement: "Just as a man is pleased with women through intimate service, so through intimate meditation is Maheavara pleased". Hence, in order to attain the excess of devotion requisite for concentration on Him for a long time, (it has to be taught) that He alone is the Supreme Brahman, and that there is no true form of His, other than this; a fresh commentary is undertaken by the acarya who teaches this, in order to exhibit that reconciliation of the Vedanta texts and the Brahma Sutras which is suitable thereto.

Now, in order to secure excess of devotion thereto, it would be proper only to proclaim His distinctive glory, as understood from Sruti, Smrti, and Puranas, and not to condemn His other form, which is real and has to be expounded as the sense of the Vedanta conforming to Logic, in order to attain what is acceptable (even) to himself as the supreme good of the soul. If (this objec-seen even in ancient sages. In order to secure strength of capacity for those prior observances by the practice of which fitness for a later stage is attained, there is confirmation (secured) in those observances, through exhibiting the condemnation of that (later stage) as contrary to texts and reason,—though (such condemnation is) really unacceptable,—and through restraining persons from primarily engaging therein.

In this way, in the Kalpa Sutra, confirmation in that state 3.211 (of the house-holder) is secured through condemning renunciation by showing its opposition to Sruti and Smrti, through restraining people from taking to it in the first instance, and through praising the state of the house-holder, wherein are observed sacrifices and other such rites for the purpose of obtaining purity of the internal organ, -(a quality) auxiliary to the excess of devotion characteristic of those fitted for renunciation. Thus, indeed, is it said by the acarya, Apastamba: "Then they quote (the following) two verses from a Purana. 'Those eighty-thousand sages who desired offspring passed along the southern course of the Sun and reached the cremation ground. Those eighty-thousand sages who did not desire offspring passed along the northern course of the Sun and obtained immortality.' Thus are praised those who keep the vow of chastity. Then they become also capable of realising their desires by the mere wish; for instance, (the production of) rain, the bestowal of children, vision of objects at a (considerable) distance, transporting oneself with the speed of thought, and other (powers) of this description. Therefore, on account of the texts and on account of the visible results, some declare these orders (of ascetics to be) the most excellent. But, it is the firm opinion of those who are well-versed in the three-fold learning that the Vedas are of (supreme) authority. They consider that what are there ordered to be performed with rice, barley, animals, ghee, potsherds, (in the company of) a wife, (to the accompaniment of) loud or muttered (hymns) should be performed and that any rule of conduct opposed thereto is unauthoritative. As for what is said of the cremation-ground, it ordains (as the fitting finale) at the end of many sacrifices, the sacrificial offering of the body. It is declared that thereupon (results) a reward without end, designated as heaven?

Further, of him, the Veda declares the offspring to be immortality; 'in thy offspring thou art born again; that indeed is thy immortality, O! mortal'. Further, he (the father) himself is perceived by the senses, to be reproduced here, (as a) distinct (being); the likeness (between the two) can be even seen, the bodies alone (being) different. Those (sons) who observe the duties enjoined increase the fame and (enjoyment of) heaven of the ancestors in the other world. In this manner, each succeeding (generation increases the fame and enjoyment of heaven) of the preceding one. They (the ancestors) live in heaven, until the destruction of the (primal) elements. In the Bhavieyat Purana (it is said) that, at the new creation, they become disseminators of Then, too, (there is) the saying of Prajapati, 'those dwell' with us who practise these—the study of the three Vedas, the (duties of the) student's career, the creation of progeny, faith, austerities, sacrifices and the bestowal of gifts. He who praises other (orders of life) becomes dust and perishes. Of those (sons), those who commit sin, they alone perish, as of a tree, the leaf (attacked by worms, falls itself alone, not affecting the branch or the tree).1 They do not injure others. (As) in this world, no connection is known of him (the ancestor) with the acts (of his sons), so too in the next (no connection exists) with the fruit of the acts. (The truth of) that may be known from the following (reason): This creation is the work of Prajapati and the sages. The bodies of those (sages) who have done what is meritorious. appear in heaven with superior resplendence (as of the constellation of the seven Rsis, i.e., the Great Bear). Even if it be that some (ascetic) by a residue of works or by austerities attains heaven while embodied, or realises his desires with the mere wish, that can be no ground for the superiority of one order over another ".2 Thus, (1) through showing by (the statement of) the first and final views, the unauthoritativeness of renunciation, as being opposed to all Scriptures which enjoin the performance of sacrifices etc., (2) through refuting with texts and reasoning the condemnation of the house holder's state, as leading to the cremation-ground, as not bringing about immortality, and (consequently) inferior, (3) through condemning in toto other orders of life, by the citation of the saying of Prajapati, (4) through removing by argument the doubt that if good deeds done by sons, grandsons etc., constitute heaven for the ancestors, the evil deeds of the former may constitute a hell for the latter, (5) through demolish. ing the superiority claimed for the other order (of renunciation) on the ground of special attainments, by showing that the power of realising one's desires by the mere wish and so on are achievable through deeds and austerities and may be acquired; by any one whether in the house-holder's or in any other order (of life). and (6) through the praise of the house-holder's order, (which is) connected with the observance of sacrifices and other rites, there is brought about with great effort, for the man of low capacity, whose non-attachment is unsteady, confirmation in the house-holder's order, in order that through purification of the internal organ there may be gradual attainment of steadiness of non-attachment. In the sütras, athapi means and also; amrtatvam hi kalpate means they become immortal. In anantyam svargyam, the additional letter 'y' is metrical. Dehatvameva anyat means the bodies alone being different. Te svargajitah punassarge bijartha bhavanti means that dwelling in heaven till the deluge, as a result of the other-worldly good deeds performed by sons, grandsons etc., they, at the commencement of a fresh creation, become Prajapatis concerned with the creation of the world. Tairitsahasmah, with them alone do we dwell; it means that only for those possessed of the wealth of the the three Vedas etc., is there attainment of our world. In Nasyasmin loke, the singular asya (his) is used in the plural significance; it means that for those ancestors there is no connection in the other world with the evil deeds committed by their sons etc., in this world, and with their results.1

Here, the statement "any rule of conduct opposed thereto is 3.212 unauthoritative," denying the basic authority for the order of renunciation, is not valid, that (authority) being obtained directly from the Jābāla Sruti, 2 and other (texts). The existence of other

^{2.} The declaration of that Sruti is "yadahareva virajet tadahareva pravrajet", "The day on which there is non-attachment orders of life is acknowledged by the acarva. Apastamba himself. earlier, in the words, "There are four orders of life—that of the house holder, of dwelling with the teacher, of silence, and of forest-dwelling; practising these steadily, whichever of these is suitable, according to the teaching, one attains welfare" (Dharms Sutras, II, 9, 21, 1 & 2). By the statement "according to the teaching", the basis for all (orders) is acknowledged. Since fourfoldness results even by the enumeration of the house-holder's order and so on, the statement "there are four" is for refuting the view that there is (but) one order (which counts). Thus, to say that "any rule of conduct opposed thereto is unauthoritative" is to contradict his own statement. As for the statement "It is declared that thereupon (results) a reward without end, designated as 'heaven' ', that is to lean on a reed. If there are such revealed texts, they are but eulogistic, like "the merit of those who have performed the four-monthly sacrifice, is, verily, inexhaustible." The other texts cited such as "in thy offspring thou art born again" are also thus explained. The argument and example based on the identity of father and son are very puerile. The similarity of two bodies is not, indeed, invariably connected with non-difference of soul. So, too, the statement as to the non-attainment of hell by the ancestors through the evil deeds of sons etc., is questionable, because of opposition to such texts as that "They | (the evil-doers) perish along with their ancestors". As for the argument "(creation is of) Prajapati and the sages" etc., that is shown to be worthless, by the acarva Apastamba himself, earlier, in the words, "Because of their distinctive splendour, there is known of them no sin" (Dharma Sūtra, II, 6, 13, 8). All this has been said by Apastamba neither in ignorance nor in error; but dull

(established), renounce even on that day" (Jabala, 4), and average at witted people, who, pleased merely at hearing the fruits of renunciation, by auddenly starting on it, though there is not (in them) the atrength of non-attachment suitable thereto, might fall, not being able to keep up that life; it is, rather, in order to show grace to such people, in the desire that they should not so fall, that the sense of the (following) text is elaborated (by Apastamba) in the realisation of its drift: "Of what (good) is the impure (intercourse of the house-holder's state)? The deer-skin, the unshaven whiskers, austerities, of what (good are they)? O! Brahmins, desire a son; he, verily, is the blameless source of enjoyment."

So too, in the Santi Parva of the Mahabharata, to Yudhiathira 3.213 who contemplates renunciation and prays for permission to renounce, in the words. "Or, living alone and observing the vow of silence, with my head shaven clean, I shall support my body begging each day of only one tree" (Chapter, IX, Verse 12), there is addressed at length by Krana, both in his own words and through

"What is the use of dirt, what of the goat-skin?

What of long hair, and what of fervour?

Seek a son, O! Brahmin!

This is the world's advice"

Unfortunately, Prof. Keith does not tell us what other interpretation is suitable, or how the literal sense he adopts fits into the context,

^{1.} Aitareya Brahmana, Ch. 33, 11, 7a (Anandisrama Edn., Vol. II, p. 836). The translation follows the commentary of Sayana, particularly in the interpretation of the expressions, impurity, goat-skin etc. Prof. Keith considers the commentator's interpretations groundless, in the present case, and prefers to translate thus:

because through the prayer to the brothers for permission to renounce, lack of steadiness of non-attachment is understood (by Kṛṣṇa), (and, it is, therefore) desired to engage him (Yudhiathira) in sacrifices etc., to purify the internal organ for the purpose of (securing) that firmness. Again, through the qualification "purifying" (applied to the path) in the verse "Having abandoned the purifying path Janaka shaved off his head; his dear wife saw him penniless, practising the life of mendicancy" (Sānti, XVIII, 4b 5a—edition used by M. N. Dutt) which occurs in the tale of Janaka,—it is shown that it is not proper to abandon the path of duty auxiliary to the (securing of) steady purity of the internal organ, and take suddenly to the order of renunciation.

3.214 So, in the Manusmiti too, only with reference to those persons not steady in their non-attachment is it said that "One should direct one's mind to renunciation after discharging the three debts; he, who, without discharging (them), practises renunciation, goes below" (Manusmiti, VI, 5) as if in disregard and suppression of the sense of the explicit texts, "The day on which there is non-attachment (established), renounce even on that day, whether from the house (-holder's state) or the forest (-dweller's)", and "renounce even from the order of student-ship" (Jābālopanişad, 4).

It is only thus that the reconciliation of Vedanta texts with the dectrine of (Brahman) with attributes has been shown by the acarya (Srikantha) in order to bestow grace on the dull-witted person by turning him away from the pursuit of what is attributeless, and making him pursue with firm devotion the meditation (of Brahman) with attributes lest, (the fool), pleased with the mere hearing of the excellent fruit, namely, the attainment of the pure Brahman, but devoid of the mental concentration that can bring about the meditation and intuition necessary for that attain; ment, should abandon the pursuit of meditation on Brahman with attributes, take forcibly to the pursuit of hearing, reflection and meditation pertaining to Brahman without attributes, and, not, reaching to the concentration of mind necessary therefor, fall between both. Nor does the exhibition of this synthesis amount. to showing that to be intended which was never intended, like the demonstration in the Kalpa Sutra, "In thy son thou art born again", that immortality for the house-holder is the pro-creation of sons. For, of such texts as "By the command of the Imperishable One, O Gargi, the Sun and the Moon are held apart." (Brh. III, 8, 9)". "He is the controller of all, ruler of all, the master of all" (Brh. IV, 4, 22) and so on, though occurring in topics relating to (Brahman) without attributes, there is an intermediate sense relating to (Brahman) with attributes, understood as a means to the comprehension of the attributeless (one). As for the (statement) that there is no other pure reality higher than that, the concealment thereof (i.e., of the higher real), like that of renunciation in the Kalpa Sutra, is for the purpose of (creating) faith in that kind of dull-witted inquirer, through teaching him thus by arguments comprehensible by his intellect.

Now, if the construction of a separate system be necessary 3.22 for dull-witted inquirers, that work should be done independently, and not based on the Brahma Sūtras, as the Brahma Sūtras have the object of inquiring into Pure Brahman; fcr, if it be admitted that the Pure Brahman is recognised by the ācārya (Śrīkantha), it should also be acknowledged that that (the Pure Brahman) is the object of inquiry (of the Sūtras), as shown by Śamkara Bhagavat-pāda. If this be urged, true (we reply); but by Śamkara Bhaga-vatpāda himself it has been shown in the case of the Sūtras that they have Brahman with attributes as an object of inquiry, on the ground that many-sidedness is an ernament that follows from the definition of a sutra. Thus, in the commentary even on the first sutra (it is said) "Brahman does exist, of the nature of eternal purity, intelligence, and freedom, omniscient and endowed with all powers. The properties of eternal purity etc., are, indeed, predicated, in view of the etymology of the word Brahma" (Samkara Bhanya, M. Ed. p. 8); thus, by showing the etymological significance of Brahma (as holding good) of both the Pure Brahman and Brahman with attributes, it is indicated that the word Brahma, about which there is inquiry, refers to both of them. Thereby is manifested his intention that like the Pure Brahman, Brahman with attributes too is to be inquired into, along with the source of knowledge, the form, the means and the fruit. As helpful thereto, in the janmadi sutra (I, 1, 2: S), the nature (of Brahman) has been determined through the definition of both (Brahmans) in the view that the property of being the cause of the world, both as efficient and material cause, non-different from the world, is characteristic of Brahman with attributes, as proprium, and of the Pure Brahman, as an accidens. One interpretation having been given of the sastra yoni sutra (I, 1, 3; 8), as confirming the possession of omniscience involved in the Saguna Brahman's creatorship of the world, there is shown another interpretation for the purpose of establishing that the Sastra is the source of knowledge of Brahman in general, Saguna as well as Nirguna. In the samanvaya sutra (I, 1, 4: S) in order to show the authoritativeness of the Sastra in respect of Brahman mentioned in the prior sutra, the connection of that which is of the form of the Vedanta with the reference thereto (i.e., to Brahman) is exhibited only as common to (both) Saguna and Nirguna (forms). And that results in distinguishing between the synthesis of all Vedanta texts with Nirguna (form) as their supreme significance, and with the Saguna (form) as their intermediate significance, in the manner indicated by the (following) words of the Samksepa Sairaka: "The synthesis of texts declaring attributes with the attributeless substance is always possible; it is not as if the synthesis of what is with attributes cannot bear synthesis with the attributeless substance. The form of Saguna Brahman is (a combination of) truth and falsehood; the meditation (thereon) is also so; the Vedic texts referring thereto are like that; hence, the intermediate sense of these Vedic texts is of a different kind (i.e., other than the final one); the other attributeless Substance, the true object (of the Sastra) is proclaimed to be different '' (Samkeepa Sarīraka, I, 463 & 464). Even of the texts, read in the topic relating to the Nirguna form, an intermediate reference to a Saguna form qualified by the attributes, resulting from the significance of words occurring in such texts, is quite legitimate.

In the ikatyadhikarana (I, 1, 5, et seq: S) refuting the reference of the Vedānta to the causality of the pradhāna acceptable to the Sāmkhyas, the reference to the causality of Brahman is made clear, only in common to (both) the Saguna and Nirguna forms. Hence it is that up to the sūtra "Svāpyayāt (because of attainment of Self in sleep)" (I, 1, 9: S), texts are cited from topics connected with the Nirguna form, such as the Sad Vidyā and so on, and in the commentary on the sūtra "Gati sāmānyāt (because of identity of purport (I, 1, 10; S)" there is exhibited the harmonious declaration of all Vedānta texts in respect of the causality of Intelligence, as common to the Saguna and Nirguna forms; but in the commentary on the sūtra "Srutatvācca (and because of its being declared)" (I, 1, 11; S) there is cited the following hymn read in the Svetasvatara Upanisad which sets out to demonstrate the glory of Para neśvara, the Saguna (Brahman): "There is of Him, in the world, no Lord nor controller nor any characteristic mark. He is the cause, the master of the masters of the senses; of Him there is neither Creator nor Master " (Svet. VI, 9). In introducing the anandamaya section that follows (thereon), the whole of the rest of the chapter is shown to arise as referring to both the Suguna and the Nirguna (forms), in the words beginning with "Two forms, indeed, are understood of Brahman, (one) with the limitations of name, form and change, and (another) different therefrom, devoid of all limitations" and ending with "Thus, Brahman, though one, is taught in the Vedanta as connected with limitations and devoid of limitations, as an object to be meditated on and an object to be known; hence is commenced the rest of the work ". Later, through the sutras "The Self consisting of Bliss is the highest Self, on account of repetition (I, 1, 12; S)", "The bhuman is Brahman, as the instruction about it is additional to that about sleep (I, 3, 8; S)", "The Imperishable is Brahman, as it supports everything up to ākāśa (1, 3, 10; 5)", "That which possesses the attributes of invisibility etc., is Brahman, because of the declaration of attributes (I, 2, 21: S) ", "The person of the measure of a thumb is Brahman, on account of the very term used (Isana) (I, 3, 24: 8)", "On account of the mention of the highest Self as different in the states of deep sleep and departure (I, 3, 42; S)", the synthesis of Vedanta texts is shown with Brahman that is of the nature of Truth, Knowledge, Infinite Imperishable Bliss, devoid of all attributes like grossness etc., and is non-different from the inner Self. Similarly their synthesis in a suitable manner with even (that form of) Brahman which is endowed with attributes, united to a resplendent auspicious form for the purpose bestowing grace on devotees, possessed of infinite auspicious qualities like having desires which come true, purposes which come true, etc., is exhibited, in the sutras, "The one within is Brahman on account of His qualities being declared (I, 1, 20:8) "; "That which consists of mind is Brahman, :hecause what is known everywhere is taught (I, 2, 1; S)" "The small ākāša is Brahman, because of what is said later, (1, 3, 14: 8)", and so on. In the chapter devoted to showing absence of contradiction (in the Vedanta doctrine, i.e., the vsecond chapter of the Sutras), just as there is shown the refutation of objections to the synthesis with the attributeless (Brahman) in the sutra "Their non-difference results from such terms as origin and the like (II, 1, 14: S)", (the same refutation is shown) even in the case of Brahman with attributes, possessed of the properties of being the material cause of the world, creating the world, bestowing grace on all beings etc, through the (following) sutras; "Brahman cannot be the cause of the world, because of difference of nature; this difference is known from Scripture (II, 1, 4: S)", "Brahman is not the Creator of the world, as beings engaging in action have a motive (II, 1, 32: $)", "There is no inequality or cruelty in the Liord, on account of his regarding merit or demerit; for, so Scripture declares (II, 1, 34: S) ", and the rest. In the (third) chapter teaching the means of attainment, the understanding of qualities like the possession of desires which come true is described for the purpose of meditation in the case of Brahman with attributes, in many sutras like "Possession of true desires and so on have to be understood here and there, on account of abode and so on (IJI, 3, 89: S)"; (this is done) in the same way as the qualities of Bliss etc., non-grossness etc., (are described) for the comprehension of Brah-

'man without attributes, in the sutras "Bliss and so on, as belonging to the subject, have to be understood everywhere (III, 3, 11: $)", and "But the negative conceptions concerning the Imperishable are to be understood in all meditations, because of the equality, and of the object being the same, as in the case of the upasad; this has been explained (III, 3, 33: $)". In the (fourth) chapter about the fruit, in the first pada, in the sutras "Repetition is required, because of the text instructing more than once (IV, 1, 1: 5)"; "But, as the Self, Sruti acknowledges and makes us understand Brahman (IV, 1, 3: $)"; "Sitting (a man is to meditate) on account of possibility (IV, 1, 7:8)"; "Where there is concentration, there meditation may be performed, there being no difference (IV, 1, 11: 8)"; "On the attainment of this, there is non-clinging and destruction of later and earlier sins; this being declared (IV, 1, 13: 5)", - the repetition to be performed of hearing etc., in the case of the Nirguna (form), and of meditation etc., in the case of the Saguna form and some such other matters are shown by double interpretation1 to govern both the Saguna and Nirguna forms. In the second pada are described the mode of departure of the enlightened one for the purpose of attaining the fruit of meditation on the Saguna (form) and the absence of necessity for departure for the attainment of the fruit of Knowledge of the Nirguna (form). In the third pada, it is shown that the path of light etc., is followed by those who know the Saguna Brahman, that what is attained by means of that path is the Saguna Brahman. In the fourth pada are determined the nature of the fruit attained by the knower of Nirguna Brahman, in three sections beginning with "Having entered the highest light, there is manifestation of his own nature, as seen from the word 'own' (IV, 4, 1: S)", and also the nature of the fruit attained by him who meditates on the Saguna (form), in the sections beginning with "But by the mere wish, the released effect their desires, that being declared (IV, 4, 8: S)."

Now, if, in the manner stated, even by the acarya Samkara himself, who showed that for the Sutras there is also a sense inquiring into the Saguna Brahman, there had been an inquiry into the nature, source of knowledge, means and the fruit in the case of Saguna Brahman too, for what purpose was another commentary written by the acarya Srikantha with reference to the Saguna (form)? If it be said that it was for the purpose of securing excess of devotion to the Saguna (form) by interpreting the Sūtras, in their entirety, as referring to the Saguna (form), why did not the acarya Samkara interpret referring in entirety to the Nirguna (form), in order to secure increased faith in the Nirguna. If this be asked, we reply here (as follows). Only the existence of the Saguna Brahman was established by Samkara ācārya; He was not demonstrated to be Parama Siva, by the removal of doubts about His being any other deity like Vienu, and save some to necknowle and her emany of the

In the dahrādhikaraņa, (I, 3, 14: S), after making an initial 3.231 statement of the conclusion that Parameśvara alone can be the small ākāśa, not the elemental ether or the finite self, there is introduced the answer to the following objection: "In the prior sentence 'that which in this Brahma City 'etc., the finite self is referred to by the word Brahma, since that is the Lord of the city in the form of the body; hence, he alone, who was mentioned earlier, can be the small ākāśa "; therein, occur the words "Or else, it is in connection with the body of the finite self alone that there is taught the proximity of Brahman, like the proximity of Vianu in the salagrama", which mentions as between Vianu and Saguna Brahman that is to be determined to be the small ākāśa, a relationship as of object of comparison with the subject; hence, it, is indicated that the Saguna Brahman here to be demonstrated is sees not of the form of Vianu. For, in the daharadhikarana itself, both before and after (the present context) occur the words "though elemental ether is the conventional sense of the word akasa, yet the comparison of that with itself is not proper," and "thought the word akasa is well-known to signify elemental ether, that is not to be understood, because of the absence of the relationship. as between object and subject of comparison"; thereby is established the difference of the small akasa from the elemental ether, because of the two being designated as subject and object of comparison, in the words "As big as is this ether, so big is that akasa within the heart" (Ch. VIII, 1, 3). The application of this principle is unbroken even in the case of what occurs in the middle (between those two statements of the commentary).)

So, in the commentary of yavadadhikara section (III, 3, 32:8) (it is said), "An ancient sage, a teacher of the Vedas, Apantaratapas by name, at the direction of Viguu, was born on the earth as Krana Dvaipayana, at the time of the conjunction of the Kali and Dvapara Yugas. Sanatkumara also, a son of Brahma's mind, was born as Skanda, because of the boon granted by himself to Rudra". By this indirect statement it is indicated through the argument a fortiori that Samhara Rudra (the Lord of Destruction, one of the three forms of the Deity) thus shown to be inferior even to Visqu can much less be Saguna Brahman, (whose nature is) to be ascertained. It is well-known from the Puranas that

Samhāra Rudra, verily, praying to Brahmā (thus) "I desire thee alone as a son or one like to thee, O Pervasive One" was granted the boon, and the consequent birth is the subject of the story of the birth of Kumāra. That Saguņa Brahman thus indicated to be different from Viṣṇu and Rudra is Parama Siva, higher than the three forms of the Deity, is shown by the use of the expression Parameśvara, generally signifying Parama Siva, in the case of the Saguṇa Brahman, (whose identity is) desired to be determined in the sections about (the being) within the Sun (I, 1, 20:S), and Nacaspati Miśra, who knew what the Bhagavatpāda had at heart, says at the commencement of his work (Bhāmatī) "To the eternal being endowed with six limbs and manifold members, to the Veda and to Bhava, we bow". Here by the terms "Veda" and "Bhava" are suitably understood what are related as source and object of knowledge, and designated as worthy of adoration; it is (thus) indicated that Saguna Brahman, (whose nature is) ascertained in that work, is but Parama Siva, (who is) well-known to be denoted by the word "Bhava", and qualified by a host of auspicious attributes in the form of six limbs and ten members.

Though (there are such indications in Samkara's system), yet 3.234 this is not established by refuting in the case of the relevant texts in each section, (their possible) reference to other deities. Extremely subtle suggestions cannot of themselves be evidence appealing to the hearts of the hearers; hence, for that purpose, a separate commentary is begun by the ācārya (Śrikantha) in order to demonstrate the harmony of the Vedānta texts with the position that the Saguna Brahman taught in this Śāṣtra is but Parama Siva, that He alone is to be meditated on as conjoined with Umā, in accordance with the injunctions in the Dahara, Śāndilya, Upakośala, Vaiśwānara and other Vidyās, and that the abode attained through the path of light etc., by the devotees of the Saguna (form) is but His resplendent world.

3.235 The advantage of demonstrating that (i.e., Saguna Brahman) is thus declared in the following verse of the Kalpataru: "The demonstration (of Brahman) as with attributes is out of compassion for those dull-witted ones who have not the capacity to intuite the Supreme Brahman without attributes; having thereby directed their minds to the pursuit of the Saguna Brahman, it (Nirguna Brahman), devoid of all figments of duality, directly manifests itself" (Kalpataru, p. 192)1. Now, if, for gaining this advantage, another commentary (like that of Srikantha) has necessarily to be undertaken, the demonstration of Saguna Brahman in Samkara's commentary is in vain. If this be said, listen to (our account of) the purposefulness even of that. The commentary is begun by Samkara Bhagavatpada only with the object of demonstrating Nirguna Brahman. That demonstration has to be effected in each section by refuting the doubts and prima facie views arising out of the possible reference of the relevant texts in each section to what is other (than Brahman), such as the finite self and so on. That refutation has to be effected by means of such characteristics as the properties of creating all, protecting all, controlling all, destroying all, and so on. There is room for this doubt: of Brahman that is demonstrated here, of which all attributes are denied, (and) which is of the nature of Intelligence alone, whence these attributes by the acceptance of which as characteristic of Brahman, the prima facie references to the finite self etc., are refuted? This is the statement of the answer: though really devoid of attributes, yet from the empirical standpoint there are of Brahman many characteristics of the nature of auspicious qualities. As endowed with these, that same Brahman without attributes, is also figuratively called Brahman with attributes. The attributes of that qualified (Brahman) meditated on in the Dahara, Sāṇḍilya, Vaiśvānara and other modes of contemplation are also taught in the topic concerning the non-qualified (Brahman), as a means of comprehending it and for the purpose of remembering it; by these are refuted the prima facie references to the finite self and so on; in order that they may be comprehended as useful for that purpose (of refutation), they have to be demonstrated by citation of the texts relating thereto

The demonstration is also needed for the comprehension of 3.2351 the fruit. This is how it is needed: though from the view-point of truth, the first fruit of the knowledge of the truth is the attainment of Brahman's Being, yet the same non-qualified Brahman. takes on and continues in the form of Isvara with attributes, until the (final) liberation of all; hence, from the empirical view-point, the fruit (of knowledge) turns out to be of the form of the attainment of the nature of Paramesvara, characterised by the possession of desires which come true and so on. Hence it is that in the first chapter, in the section relating to the small ākāśa, it is (first) made clear through the qualities like possession of desires which come true, etc., mentioned in the residual sentences, that the small ākāśa is Parameśvara; then is raised the doubt that these are not characteristic of Paramesvara, since the qualities are mentioned of the finite self too, in the words "That self free from sin old age, death, sorrow, hunger, and thirst, possessing desires which come true", occurring in the Prajapati Vidya (Ch. VIII, 7, 1); in the sutra "Uttaraccedavirbhuta svarupastu (if it be said that as seen from a later context, the finite self is meant, there is that reference to the finite self only in so far as its true nature has become manifest)" (I, 3, 19: S), which sets out to remove that objection), it is said (in the following words) that the manifestation of qualities, like the possession of desires which come true, in the released soul is only on the attainment of the nature of Paramesvara, not in the state of difference therefrom, and that there is thus no inappropriateness in their being characteristic of Brahman: "Hence, that non-ultimate form of the finite self established in ignorance, sullied by the faults of agency and enjoyment, attachment and aversion and the rest, united to manifold evil, by the dissolution of that (form), what is opposed thereto. viz., the true nature of Paramesvara, possessed of the qualities of freedom from sin etc., is attained through knowledge" (S Bh. M. Ed. p. 175). The dain arevel to mad out a remaitace has no series

Even in the first chapter, in the jagadvācitva section (I, 4, 16, et seq: S) while leading up to the establishment of the reference to the Supreme Brahman by the introductory and the concluding portions of the discussions between Bālākī and Ajātaśatru, it is said "the reference even of the concluding portion to Brahman is seen from the statement of unsurpassed fruit in the text "keeping off all sin, he who knows thus attains pre-eminence over all beings, independence, and mastery"; thereby, it is shown that the fruit of release is of the form of attainment of the ntaure of Īśvara with attributes; for, mastery of all beings does not exist elsewhere than in Parameśyara.

In the second chapter too, in the amśādhikarana (II, 3, 48 et seq: S), the attainment of the nature of Parameśvara by the released one is made clear by the following statement of objection,

"If the finite self be admitted to be an element of Isvara, then from his experience of the sorrows of bondage, there would be experience of misery for Isvara also; just as in ordinary experience, by the pain occurring in the hand, foot or some other part, there is experience of pain for Devadatta, of whom that is a part. And hence, those who attain that will attain greater misery. Therefore, the prior state of bondage would itself be superior; hence, perfect knowledge would be fraught with evil" (S. Bh., M. Ed. p. 480-481). It is also (made clear) by the reply (which is) based on the nonconfusion effected by the well-known relationship of original and reflected image. Nor may the word Isvara be interpreted in some way so as to signify pure Intelligence; for, in the prior section "Parat tu taccbrutch (from the Supreme, that being declared)" (11, 3, 41 and 42: S) it is (first) made clear that the agency of the finite self is dependent on the Lord; then is introduced the secondary sutra of that section "(The Lord acts) having regard to the effort made, for the sake of the non-futility of injunctions and prohibitions (II, 8, 42: 8) "in order to answer the objection, "if, now, there be causal agency in the Lord, there should also be (in Him) inequality and cruelty"; that section thus relates to the Saguna Lord; therefore, the amsa section, which follows it (also) relates to the same topic. The identity of topic with the preceding section is (also) made plain by the (following) introductory passage of the present section setting out the prima facie view: "The relationship of the helper and the helped has been declared as between the Lord and the finite self. The relationship is observed in experience, as between master and servant or as between fire and sparks. Hence, the relationship of the helper and the helped being admitted as between the Lord and the finite self, access in the enquiry whether it is to be said to be like the relationship of master and servant or like that of fire and sparks, (the prima facie view is) that it is either undetermined or that it is the relationship of master and servant, that variety being well-known to be the relation of the ruler and the ruled". (S. Bh., M. Ed. p. 478).

3.2354

In the third chapter, in the section on dreams (III, 2, 1 et seq: 8), the sutra "But by meditation on the Supreme that which is hidden is made manifest; from Him, indeed, proceed bondage and its opposite (III, 2, 5: S)" is introduced in order to answer the objection that the creation of the imaginary chariot etc., in dreams comes about through the lordly powers of the finite self, who is non-different from the Lord. In explaining that sutra, (it is said) "Though the finite self and the Lord be related as element and that of which it is an element, the difference in characteristics between the finite self and the Lord is certainly patent. Is there then no community of characteristics between the finite self and the Lord? Not that there is none; but though existent, it is hidden by the veil of ignorance and so on. That, again, which is hidden, is manifested to some persons, who, having their ignorance dispelled by strenous meditation on Paramesvara that is Existence, attain perfection by the grace of the Lord-just as the power of clear vision is recovered by the potency of medicine on the removal of the obscuring film" (S. Bh., M. Ed. p. 568). In this context is exhibited the attainment of the nature of Saguna (Brahman) by the released one; for, on the attainment of the form of pure Intelligence, there cannot be the manifestation of the qualities, such as possession of purposes which come between five and sparts Hence, the relationship of no os bas art

3.2355 In the fourth chapter, (this is made still more clear in the following way): being desirous to know in what form is described the manifestation (of the soul) referred to in the texts "in its own nature (the soul) manifests itself (Ch. VIII, 12, 3)", we are told by the sutra "By the form of Brahman, (thinks) Jaimini, because of the reference and the rest (IV, 4, 5: 8)", that manifestation is in that form of Brahman (the description of which) begins with freedom from sin, ends with the possession of purposes which come true, and includes omniscience and lordship over all: (this is seen) from the reference (in the text) "That Self free from sin etc.," (Ch. VIII, 1, 5), and the passage "He moves about there, laughing, playing, rejoicing, with women or vehicles" (Ch. VIII, 12, 3), which makes known the possession of lordly powers; so thinks Jaimini. In the next sutra " By the nature of Intelligence alone, that being the nature of the Self; thus thinks Audulomi (IV, 4, 6: 8)", a different opinion is introduced, that, the true nature of the self being understood to be bare Intelligence, from the text "Thus this Self has neither inside nor outside, but is only a mass of Intelligence" (Brh. IV, 5, 13), the manifestation is by that alone. The next sutra "Though it be thus, because of the reference to and the existence of the qualities mentioned earlier there is absence of contradiction; so Badarayana thinks (IV, 4, 7: S)", which states the conclusion, is thus explained: "Even though the ultimate nature (of the Self) as Pure Intelligence is admitted, (yet) since there is no denial of the lordly power of Brahman understood from earlier references and so on, from the empirical view-point, Badarayanacarya holds that there is no contradiction" (S. Bh., M. Ed. p. 850): thereby it is made still more clear that the released one attains the nature of Saguna Isvara, possessed of unexcelled lordly power. Since it has to be said in the doctrine of Nirguna Brahman, that the attainment thereof is release, how can it be said that the attainment of the nature of Saguna Isvara is release? (This doubt too is answered. thereby. Though from the view-point of truth, the released one is but bare intelligence, (yet) from the empirical view-point of the bound soul, till the (final) release of all, there will attach to the soul that has attained the nature of Paramesvara, that is the original image (as contrasted with the individual who is the reflected image), as well as to Paramesvara Himself, unsurpassed lordly power and the entire host of other attributes well-known to belong to Paramesvara. Thus, the commentary of the Bhagavatpada undertakes to exhibit all the auspicious qualities of Paramesvara mentioned at length in all meditations on the Saguna form; for, (these qualities) are useful in exhibiting the characteristics of Brahman for the purpose of demonstrating the characteriess (Brahman), and are further helpful in elaborating the glory of the Saguna Lord, who is of the form of the fruit attained by true knowledge; what has to be expounded being thus extensive. in (that commentary), though primarily setting out to demonstrate Nirguna Brahman, talk of the Saguna form is seen to bulk largely, while the inquiry into the Nirguna form, owing to nonextensiveness of what is to be expounded, takes up little space. Just as in the four Vedas, all setting out only with the identical object of teaching the supreme spiritual good, -(which is) of the nature of the attainment of Brahman, -for the purpose of showing grace to all creatures, the exposition of action alone, which generates purity of the internal organ, as helpful thereto (i.e., the attainment of Brahman) is elaborated at length; the Vedanta portion, which has for its object the exposition of Brahman, is small, because of non-extensiveness of what is to be expounded.

3.2356 Now, if thus, the inquiry into the Saguna form is for the purpose of inquiry into the Nirguna form, the former follows by arthapatti, even from the promissory statement as to the latter inquiry, as something (necessarily) to be undertaken, like the inquiry into the means and fruit; (but) by the statement in the commentary "Brahman does exist etc.," it is declared that the term "Brahman" referring to what is to be inquired into is common to the Saguna form, in order to secure the conclusion that the inquiry into the Sagura form too is promised. Why should this be done? If (you) ask this, know then, that is declared as helpful to the promise in respect of that (inquiry), in order to indicate that for the Brahma Sutras, in their entirety, there is another interpretion as referring to the Saguna (form). (The other interpretation is arrived at) by recourse to differences in the combination (of words) and so on. It is only to show (this), at least to some extent, to those eager (to understand) how the other interpretation (is arrived at), that, on the analogy of the single rice from the pot, two varpakas are set out in the sastrayoni sutra (I, 1, 3; S). It is only to show that the commentator has followed the maxim of the single rice from the pot, in setting out these two interpretations of the sastrayoni sutra, referring to both the Saguna and Nirguna forms, that the author of the Kalpataru himself makes clear the indication of a reference to both the Saguna and Nirguna forms, in the commentary (bhasya) on the sutra "But Agnihotra and the like tend to the same effect, that being shown by Scripture (IV, 1, 16: S)". By him, indeed, an interpretation is offered of the sutra "agnihotra and the like etc.," (IV, 1, 16: S), relating it to the attributeless (form), (in the following way): agnihotra and the rest have an effect of the nature of that direct knowledge of the attributeless Brahman, which is praised by the words "on the attainment of that" in the sutra "on the attainment of that, later and earlier sins etc., (IV, 1, 13: 8);" this is shown by the text "they desire to know, by sacrifice etc., (Brh. IV, 4, 22)". Though opposed to the genus Karma, as burning down the whole host of Karma, yet the origination of that knowledge by specific acts such as permanently obligatory sacrificial rites, is not inconsistent; for, though the burning is of the entire forest, the burning of the forest is seen to be the work of the bamboos etc., in the forest. Then is shown another interpretation relating to the Saguna form : agnihotra and the rest have the effect of the attainment of Saguna Brahman, the observance of sacrifices etc., being seen in Kekaya and others who knew Saguna Brahman. There is not, as in the case of the fruit of knowledge of the attributeless, any inconsistency in the fruit of devotion to the Saguna being effected by Karma, since that (fruit), which is of the form of enjoyment in Brahmaloka, is seen to admit of degrees. Thus, another interpretation for all the Brahma Sutras, referring them to the Saguna (form), has been but indicated by Samkaracarya, by showing that the term "Brahman" which is the object of inquiry in the jija asa sutra (I, 1, 1) is common to the Saguna form too, and by showing. in some cases, two interpretations referring to both the Saguna and Nirguna (forms); it is to make this manifest for the purpose of showing grace to devotees that (the other interpretation) is undertaken by Śrikanthācārya.

Now, this mode of demonstrating Saguna Brahman, being unopposed to the recognition of Nirguna Brahman, is acceptable to Samkarācārya; if this same be what is shown by Śrīkanthācārya, then in his system, only those Vedānta texts which are admitted to refer to Saguna Brahman should be cited in the (respective) sections, and their sense determined to refer to the Saguna Lord acceptable to him, after refuting their reference etc., to other deities. (But) those very Vedänta texts, such as the Sad Vidyä (Ch. VI, 2, et seq), Änanda Valli (Taitt. II), the story of Pratardana (Kaus. III, 1), Katha Valli, the Antaryāmi Brāhmaņa (Brh III, 7), the Mundaka, Bhūma Vidyā (Ch. VII, 23 & 24), and so on, which are determined in the respective sections to relate to the attributeless (Brahman), are seen to be determined by him in those very sections, to refer to the Saguna (Brahman) If they too relate to the Saguna (Brahman), on what authority are we to hold that the recognition of Nirguna Brahman is based? Hence, it is clear that the present commentary is set out only in opposition to the doctrine of Nirguna Brahman. If this be said, it is answered (as follows).

Srikanthacarya admits as his own final position, these conclu- 3.242 sions of Non-dualism, (which are) helpful in reaching to pure-nondualism, viz., that the entire world, intelligent and non-intelligent is of the form of Brahman's Cit-Sakti, that it is of the nature of Brahman, non-different from Him, and of the form of all His auspicious qualities, that Brahman is really non-changing, that the perception "the pot exists" etc., relates to the existentiality of Brahman, that the perception "the pot appears" relates to the manifestation of Brahman, and that the perception "I am happy" relates to a fragment of the Bliss of Brahman; he expresses the opinion "there is liberation even here for the devotees of the Nonrelated", wherever there is occasion for the contrary opinion, and he establishes that (opinion), (speaking) in his own person; hence it is not possible to deny that in his ultimate conclusion Brahman is attributeless, unconnected with the world, non-distinct from all finite selves, and of the nature of pure-non-duality. For, if this were denied, there would result conflict with many of his conclusions. So, in acknowledging pure-Brahman, only the Sad Vidys and other Vedanta texts determined by Samkaracarya to relate thereto are the basic authority. The demonstration of the harmony of their sense with the Saguna (form) is not in the view that they have no reference to the Nirguna (form), but rather in the view that there is significance in respect of the Saguna also. Of texts which set out to introduce qualities, though occurring in topics related to Nirguna, such as the Sad Vidya and so on, there is, indeed, an intermediate significance in respect of the Saguna, as qualified by the respective attributes, (a significance) by holding to which Brahman's characteristics are explained even in the Samkara Bhasya. Thus, verily, in the Iksatyadhikarana (I, 1, 5, et seq: S), the initial seeing (i.e., desiring) is the characteristic; in the anandamaya section, creatorship of all which is mentioned in the sutra "And because of its being declared to be the cause (I, 1, 14:8)" and declared in the text "He created all this etc. whatever is here (Taitt. II, 6)" is the characteristic; in the section "Prana is Brahman, that being understood from a connected consideration of the passages (I, 1, 28, et seq: S)", controllership. mentioned in such texts as "He is the Lord of the world, He is the protector of the world" (Kaus III, 8), which embrace the grounds for the understanding (referred to in the sutra), constitutes the characteristic; in the section " The eater (is Brahman) since whatever is movable and immoveable is mentioned" (I, 2, 9, et seq: 8), the characteristic is the property of destroying the world indicated by the words Brahmin and Ksatriya, mentioned in the text under reference "He of whom both Brahmin and Keatriya become the food (Katha. II, 25)", which states the ground (mentioned) in the sutra; in the section "The internal ruler of the devas (is Brahman), His qualities being designated" (I, 2, 18 et seq: $), the characteristic is internal rulership of all, as mentioned in the text "He who directs the earth from within " which establishes the ground (mentioned) in the sutra; in the section "That which possesses the attributes of invisibility etc., (is Brahman), because of the declaration of attributes" (I, 2, 21 et seq: $), the characteristic mark is omniscience etc , mentioned in the text "He who knows all, he who understands all "establishing the ground (mentioned) in the sutra; in the bhumadhikarana (I, 8, 8 & 9: S) the characteristic mark is being the cause of all, as stated in texts. like "from the self, the pranas (Ch. VII, 26, 1)" etc., which establish the second sutra (of the section) "And on account of agreement of the attributes (I, 3, 9:8)"; in the section about the Imperishable (I, 3, 10, et seq: S), the property of directing is the characteristic mark, as mentioned in texts like "By the direction of that Imperishable, O Gargi, Sun and Moon stand apart (Brh. III, 8, 9)", which establish the second sutra "This supporting can be the work only of Brahman, because of the direction, declared of the Imperishable (I, 3, 11: S)"; in the section about deep sleep and departure (I, 3, 42 & 43; S), the characteristic mark is the mastery of all and the rest, mentioned in texts like "Controller of all, Lord of all, Master of all (Brh. IV, 4, 22)," which establish the second sutra "And on account of such words as Lord etc., (I, 3 43: $)"; in the jagadvācitva section, (I, 4, 16, et seq: S), the characteristic mark is the creatorship of the whole world, mentioned in the text "He, O! Balaki, who is the creator of all these persons, He of whom they are the creations, He, verily, is to be known (Kaus. IV, 19)", which is included in the ground (mentioned) in the sutra; and in the section vakyanvayat (1, 4, 19: S). the creatorship of the entire world of name, form, and work, as mentioned in texts like "What we have as the Rg Veda, Yajur Veda etc., has been breathed forth trom this mighty Being (Brh. II, 4, 10)", (is the characteristic mark as) that is embraced by the word "connected meaning" (in the sutra, "on account of the connected meaning of the texts"). There is thus found mention of the form and characteristics qualifying Saguna Brahman in sections relating to the Nirguna. By that it is necessarily understood that though these texts mentioning the respective attributes occur in topics concerning the Nirguna, there is of them an intermediate significance in respect of the Saguna form qualified by the respective attributes. On this is based Srikanthācārya's declaration of the synthesis of the topical text in each section with Saguna Parameśvara. The non-declaration of the synthesis with the Nirguna, the object of ultimate significance, is for the purpose of increasing devotion to the Saguna, by concealing the (other) and is, hence, legitimate.

Now, the non-declaration of synthesis with the Nirguna may. in the manner indicated, not be opposed (to the recognition of pure-non-dualism). (But) the texts relating directly to the Nirguna. by identity of construction wherewith, those Saguna texts occurring in Nirguna contexts have to be shown to refer, in the end, to Nirguna (Brahman), as their ultimate significance, even of these a Saguna interpretation is seen (to be offered) with (much) effort; as, for instance, of the text "one only Without a second" in the Iksatyadhikarana (I, 1, 5, et seq) or of the text "where nothing else is seen etc.," in the bhumadhikarana (I, 8, 7 & 8) or of the text "just as, dear one, by one lump of clay all that is made of clay is known, all modification being a name based on words, the truth being clay alone", in the arambhana section (II, 1, 15, et seq). The Saguna interpretation offered of the first of these texts is cited even in (our exposition of) the prima facie view, (in this work). Of the third, the following two interpretations are shown; modification (form) and name are vacarambhapam, i.e., become the cause of speech, of the nature of ISAS designation and utility. The mode pitcher etc., and the name pitcher etc., which become the producers of experience, of the nature of designation and utility, are only of the substance clay. In reality, pitcher etc., are true, i. e., veritable, only as clay, the existence of the pitcher not being seen apart from the clay. Or else, change is vacarambhanam, i.e., the modification pitcher is the object only of the statement "This is a pitcher". It (the pitcher) is but another mode originated from the substance clay for practical purposes, not a substance other than clay. The name is true only in respect of the clay; "all names like clay, pitcher, etc.. are true, -truth is what holds of Sat, i.e., a veritable object-when pitchers etc., are considered to be but clay, not when considered to be another substance; (this is) because the pitcher is but clay". These two interpretations are offered to show that the vacarambhana text seeks to establish the essential non-difference of cause and effect, and to refute the view that the text seeks to establish non-reality of the effect, which is distinct from the cause. Thus, verily, knowledge of all by the knowledge of one having been promised earlier, in order to explain that, the text "Just as, dear one, by one lump of clay everything made of clay is known " is introduced as an illustration. Here, (it may be said) this illustration does not apply. The lump of clay being radically distinct from its modifications, pitcher, basin, etc, because of difference of utility and designation, from the knowledge of the lump of knowledge of its modifications does not follow. With reference to this objection, it is the opinion of the acarya (Srikantha) that the vācārambhana text has set out with the object of setting forth an illustration establishing the non-difference of the effect and cause, viz., pitcher and lump of clay. works era anoitetergrams own

3.24211 This is the sense of his first interpretation. Modification means the property of being a pitcher, i.e., having a large rounded belly and so on; name means a word like pitcher etc., whose functioning is conditioned by that; both these are vacarambhana. "Vāca" is speech, discourse, such as "bring the pitcher"; thereby is indicated also the utility arising therefrom. "Arambhanam" means begun, originated thereby, i.e., cause. The cause of speech; that is, modification and name are respectively the causes of utility and designation. The word arambhanam applied to both vikarah (in the masculine) and namadheyam (in the neuter) is in the neuter gender and sigular number, because of the rule, "A neuter noun, which has the same form, only differing in affix, is optionally retained, and the other dropped, and it is like a singular number (Pāṇini, I, 2, 69) "1 This is what is said thereby. Of the lump of clay and its modifications, though identical in substance, there is difference (in respect) of utility and designation, due to difference of form such as lumpiness and the possession of a large round belly, as also to the difference of name, whose serily, knowledge of all ne functioning is conditioned thereby.

Now, because of the doubt, "why is there not the same difference (here) as between different substances like the cow and the buffalo?", it is said that the clayiness alone is true; of the pitcher, basin etc., clayiness alone is (veritable), it being proved by the recognition "that very lump of clay is now of the form of the pitcher," and the test of the absence of difference, between them in respect of heaviness. Having thus established their proved identity, it is proper to postulate of the differences involved in discourse and (practical) utility that they are of the nature of the limiting adjuncts of name and form; this is what is meant.

As for the second interpretation, this is its sense. Modi-3.24212 fication originates in speech; the modification—pitcher, basin, etc., is an object only of the judgment "This is a pitcher", and not a substance other than clay.

Now, (there is) the doubt, if it is not a substance other than clay, how do the names pitcher, basin, etc., not applicable in the stage of the lump of clay, come to be applied later on? (In reply to this doubt) it is said, the name is true only in respect of the clay; even the names pitcher, basin etc., apply to an existent veritable substance, only considered as that substance clay, not considered as another substance; for, another substance is unproveable, being opposed to recognition and so on. On this view, because of the Smrti text "the word Sat (is used of) the true and the fitting", to the word Sat which is a synonyma of Satya signifying a veritable being, is added the suffix ya signifying what is applicable thereto. The word 'arambhana' has to be construed as ultimately meaning the condition of being what the word denotes, since it means here not the originator (but) the condition of being the originator. Though it is predicated of what is in the masculine gender, it is mentioned in the neuter, which is used to describe what is of common gender, as in the Sutra of Pāņini, "Dvigureka vacanam, the -compound Dvigu is singular in number (where the subject Dvigu is in the masculine and the predicate ekavacanam is in the neuter)" (Panini, Sutra II, 4, 1).1 This is the peculiarity (of the interpretation)

In the same way, in the sections "na sthanata (III, 2, 11, 3.24213 et seq)" and the rest, the texts referring to absence of attributes and form in Brahman, and to non-connection with the world are interpreted to signify the absence of objectionable qualities and (the existence of) connection with the world. Further, the supreme declarations "That thou art" etc., which are at the very head of the authorities for non-difference of the finite self from Brahman, are stated in support of the prima facie view as to the nondifference of the finite self from Brahman in the sutras II, 1, 21 and III, 4, 2, which are the sutras setting out the prima facie view occurring in the arambhana section (II, 1, 15, et seq) and the purusartha section (III, 4, 1, et seq); then there is the commentary on the two sutras stating the conclusion (in each section), viz., "But more, because of the designation of difference (II, 1, 22)" and "But because of the teaching of the different one, Badarayana's view is valid, this being seen (III, 4, 8)"; there is also the commentary on the two secondary sutras of the akasa section in the third pada (of chapter I), viz,, "Because of difference in sleep and at departure (I, 3, 43)" and "Because of expressions like Lord and so on (I, 3, 44)", which are introduced as a reply to the objection that there is no Paramesvara other than the inner self, because of the teaching in such texts as "That thou art"; in all these, that (prima facie view) is refuted, since those (texts) do not refer to non-difference, as shown by the citation of manifold texts establishing difference.

3.24214 In the section beginning with "(The jīva is) a part (of Brahman) etc." (II, 3, 42, et seq), in setting out to refute the prima facie view that Brahman Himself, because of limiting adjuncts, attains the nature of the finite self, the supreme declarations (of non-difference) are directly interpreted (as follows), as signifying something other (than non-difference): from the teaching of such texts as "That thou art", "This Self is Brahman" etc., there is absence of otherness between Brahman and the finite self, as between pervader and what is pervaded; just as between the bodies pervaded by the Yogin and the Yogin who pervades them, there is inseparability and absence of otherness, so too as between the finite selves and Brahman. All this is certainly opposed to the acceptance of pure-non-dualism.

If (the above) be said, all that is (presently) explained in such 3.24221 a manner as is not inconsistent (with the acceptance of pure-nondualism). The sutra "But more, because of the designation of difference (II, 1, 2')" is one which establishes not that the finite self is different from Brahman, but rather that, because of the mention of difference in respect of little knowingness and omniscience and so on, Brahman is higher than the finite self in resnect of the qualities of omniscience etc., and that hence the bonds' of agency, enjoyment etc., in the finite self are illusory. There is not for Him as for the finite self the erroneous notion that the creation of the world which is the ground thereof (i.e., of agency and enjoyment) is the doing of what is undesirable; therefore, that (creation) is only for His sport, according to the maxim, "(just as) a person plays with (his) reflection seeing the effect of straightness, crookedness etc, occurring therein, so does Brahman (play) with the modifications of the finite self "; this is what the sutra is directed to establish. Otherwise, the defect of not effecting what is agreeable, -which is suspected (in Brahman) on the basis of the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman, being removed even by the exhibition of their difference, the statement in the sutra about (Brahman) being "more" will become useless. (Now) the next sutra is "And as in stones etc., that is inappropriate (II, 1, 28)", and the commentary thereon (is to the effect) that since it is declared of the finite selves too, as of a stone, a stick, a clod or a wisp of straw that in virtue of their ignorance etc., they belong to a class entirely different from Isvara, who is associated with omniscience etc., the identity of the two is inappropriate; it appears from this that by refuting the non-difference of the finite self and Brahman, their difference is established. Though (this be so), yet its (real) significance is in the refutation of the non-difference of the class of inert beings from Brahman, by the a fortiori argument, on the ground that when non-difference does not hold even of the finite self which to some extent at least belongs to the same class (as Brahman), what then of the Non-intelligent, which is entirely of a different class? Hence, the immediately following portion of the commentary: "thus, even of the Intelligent, there is non-appropriateness of the being of Isvara, because of their difference in respect of excess of attributes; what then of the Non-intelligent, which is essentially of a different character? This is the sense". Nor may it be said that, when because of the creation of the world, the defect of not effecting what is agreeable is suspected on the basis of the nondifference of the finite self and Brahman, the refutation of that should proceed by the establishment either of their difference or their being related as higher and lower, though non-different, and that the refutation of the non-difference of the class of inert beings from Brahman serves no purpose here. For, though not useful here, it is useful in establishing that the non-otherness mentioned in the sutra II, 1, 15 (Tadananyatvam arambhana sabdadibhyah) is not of the form of non-difference of the class of inert beings from Brahman. Hence it is that these three sutras II, 1, 21 to 23 beginning with "Itaravyapadeśät etc.," are not interpreted in this commentary as constituting a separate section, as (they are) in other commentaries. Similarly, even the adhikopades sutra (III, 4, 8) occurring in the section about the summum bonum seeks only to show that Parameśvara, (who is) higher than the finite self, does exist, by refuting the prima facie view that there is no being whatsoever of the name of Parameśvara, and that the Upamişadic knowledge of the self is only knowledge relating to the finite self. So too, the two sutras beginning with that about deep sleep and departure (I, 3, 48 and 44) refer only to the existence of Parameśvara who is higher than the finite self, not to the establishment of difference (between the two). Hence it is that in the commentaries on the sutras, there is no interpretation offered favouring (the view of) difference, of the texts like "That thou art", which are mentioned in the statement of the prima facie view, as supporting that (view).

Though in the commentary on the améa section (II, 3, 42, 3.24222 of seq) there is an interpretation of them as favouring difference, yet, that (interpretation) being negatived by the commentary on the sutra "But as the Self, Sruti acknowledges and makes us understand Brahman (IV, 1, 3)", is not capable of expressing their inherent meaning. There, verily, the commentary expounding the final position, which sets about to refute the prima facie view—that meditation on Brahman by those desirous of release should be performed only as on what is different from one-self as on one's éesin (i.e., the principal to which one is accessory) and not as identical with one-self—(proceeds thus): "though the Supreme Brahman known as Siva is certainly higher than the finite self, yet the devotee meditates on that as 'I am Brahman', for the reason that devotees of yore have understood that as but the Self (saying) 'I am, verily, Thou, O Lord, O Divinity, Thou, verily, art I': though the Being meditated on is a being different from the devotees, the Supreme Being (yet) bestows grace on them by conferring his own form. They, in turn, teach that as the Self to other disciples, through (texts like) 'That thou art'". clear that by the exhibition here of the non-dualistic sense of texts like "That thou art", the sense of inseparability declared earlier, on the basis of the relationship of body and the embodied, is negatived. It is only in order to show this that the Jabala text "I am, verily, Thou' is cited. This sense has been elaborated earlier, in order to show that if the co-ordination were limited to the relationship of the body and the embodied, the words "I am, verily, Thou" would be inappropriate. That the natural sense of the text "That thou art" is but non-difference has also been elaborated already.

^{1.} If they constituted a separate section, II, 1, 23 would not relate back to II, 1, 15, as Appayya Diksita wants to make out. It is worth noting that according to the Mysore Edition, II, 1, 21—23 constitute a fresh adhikarapa.

et seq) is negatived by this; for, it is not proper that what is established in an earlier section, on the strength of sutras, should be later negatived by one-self. The commentator's opinion should, rather, be taken to be this: Brahman is to be meditated on either as embodied in one's self, in the Dahara and other meditations, in the manner stated in the améa section (II, 8, 42 et seq), or as non-different from one-self in the manner stated in the ahamgraha section (IV, 1, 3). And thus, of the sentence "They in turn teach that as the Self to other disciples, through texts like "That thou art" refer to the meditation of non-difference, and not to real non-difference; for, difference and non-difference are opposed. The arms are rise at a said that the art the art of all

This objection too is refuted (thus): it is improper to postulate 3.242222 the acceptance by the commentator of the sense of the text "That thou art", as declared in the amsa section, (II, 3, 42, et seq), for, that is opposed (1) to the legitimate sense of the Jabala text and the expression "Thou art" (in "That thou art"), (2) to the commentary on the ahamgraha section (IV, 1, 3) which is intended to establish-in the (following) words, "The attainment of Siva's nature which is abundance of limitless supreme Bliss is release: the attainment of Siva's nature cannot come about except by the cessation of the state of the bound creature; the cessation of that state of bondage cannot be except by the meditation of that (Sivatva). Hence, the devotee from whom the state of bondage is gone, by the destruction of the bonds in the torrent of ceaseless contemplation 'I am Brahman', becomes Siva Himself''—that there is no release except by the meditation of non-difference from Brahman, and (3) to the commentary on the adhyana section (III, 3, 14), which establishes the abandonment of all that is understood to be different from Siva, in the meditation on Siva, for the purpose of release; further, it is not proper to hold that that the sense of difference declared in the amsa section (II, 8, 42 et seq) being accepted, another sense of the nature of nondifference in meditation is also accepted by the commentator, since the two senses of the one text "That thou art" are contradictory, like difference and non-difference of the finite self from Brahman.1

If now it be said "Let not its sense be that of the relation of 3.242223

^{1.} In the latter case, the two alternatives have been recognised to be contradictory by the commentator himself, in II, 1, 22.

the body and the embodied; there is only one sense, that of the assess anature of the meditation of imagined non-difference", no, (we reply); for, it cannot be held that the contemplation of non-difference has but an imagined object, since the knowledge of nondifference with Brahman is declared to persist even in released ones, in the (following) words of the commentary on the vikiravarti sutra (IV, 4, 19), relating to what happens to the liberated one, "he enjoys the splendour of perfect self-consciousness, immersed in the world which is of one texture with the nature of Brahman-the harmony of Siva with Sakti-which abounds in Supreme Bliss, Light and Power", as also in the words of the commentary on the ahamgraha section (IV, 1, 8) "For, it is the sense of all revealed texts that release is the attainment of supreme self-hood, which is free from the state of the bound creature, characterised by love of bodily conditions such as that of Brahmin, etc., which is full of essential unsurpassable bliss, and is of the form of Siva, the self-luminous witness"; there is the further reason that the non-difference of finite selves from Brahman, through Cit-Sakti, cannot be avoided.

of the relationship of the body and the embodied, (which is) exhibited by him to support the sense declared in the améa section (II, 3, 42 et seq) is negatived by himself elsewhere? It cannot be said either that only the possibility of the relationship of body and the embodied being pregnant with real difference is denied by the exhibition of the sense of non-difference, not that sense (itself), which is of the relationship of body and the embodied; for, of one sentence referring to non-difference, it is not proper to postulate another significance also in respect of the relationship of body and the embodied, which is unreal. Nor can it be said that to make persons of inferior capacity engage in meditation on the Saguna Lord, and in order to create increased devotion thereto, the interpretation relating to what is not the (real) sense is set out on the principle of the sugar coated capsule, to induce that (devotion) by concealing the truth about the attributeless (Brahman); for, even the meditation on the Saguna (Lord), has to be performed, verily, through non-difference, in the form "I am Brahman". Hence, it must be shown here, of sentences teaching non-difference of the finite self and Brahman, that the sense is just that (i.e., non-difference literally) or of the form of non-difference in meditation; the setting forth of a sense which is of disservice to meditation does not stand to reason. If this be said, it is answered (thus).

There is not, even among those who, understanding release 3.242225 to be the summum bonum, are desirous of attaining to it, full development of competency, because of deficiency in the agent; (this is) of the capacity required in practice or laid down in the Sastras in respect of either the contemplation of the Non-qualified, following on the hearing of and reflection on that sense, which imparting truth is helpful directly to release, or in the meditation on the Qualified, in the form of the meditation of the small (ether, dahara vidyā) and so on, which is helpful in securing concentration of mind etc., thereon. The path of service well-known in Puranas, Itihasas and Agamas is intended for such persons, Though this (path) is, on the tatkratunyaya, capable of bringing about the attainment (only) of the status of Siva on the Himalayas or on Kailasa, in the capacity of Lord of the Hosts and so on, yet on the attainment of that status, it brings about release, through the stages of meditation etc., even from there. Hence it is that it is said in the Kāmika: "Those spiritual teachers in the world who wear My marks, meditate on Me and seek refuge in Me alone. in them is the fitness (to partake of what has been offered to Me). not in any other creatures. What is eatable, tasteable, drinkable and whatever else is offered to Sambhu, that may be eaten by those who consider themselves as servants. Those who, established in Saiva Pasupata and seeking release, have reached to the path of service, by them alone is (this) to be drunk or eaten or smelt". In (thus) distinguishing competency and the lack of it to partake of the remnants of food offered to Siva, the qualification "one who seeks release" is applied to those who have reached to the path of service. Thus, in the view that grace should be shown to those of gross understanding unfitted for meditation etc., by starting them on the path of service, in order to create for them a taste therein, (it is said) that the path of service alone is the purport of all the treatises on release. Being of the opinion that what is so declared in them should be indicated (here) in some measure, another mode of interpretation of texts like "That thou art", in the sense of the relationship between oneself and one's master, (which is) of the nature of that between the body and the embodied, is made out by the acarya in the amsa section; thus there is no inconsistency. War and to anot out at bolldar and another

3.24223 As for the postulation of a different interpretation for the Frambhana sruti (in II, 1, 16). that is helpful for the purpose of strengthening faith in the Saguna topic, and is, hence only a figurative explanation. This too has been explained in what has been cited before from the commentary on the sutra "asmadivacca tadanupapattih (And as in stones etc., that is inappropriate; II, 1, 23)", By that commentary indeed, it is declared that the non-otherness of the inert world from Brahman cannot be of the nature of non-difference therewith. Thereby, the nonotherness declared of it in the tadananyatva sutra (II. 1, 15) ends only in its being incapable of being spoken of apart from Brahman; for, non-difference from Brahman being absent, there cannot be non-difference from Cit-Sakti either, which is non-distinct from Brahman, and hence, the declaration of its (this inert world's) being a transformation of Cit-Sakti ends only in (its being) an illusion. Therefore, it is the opinion of the commentator, as it is the view of the Sutrakara, that the sense of the vacarambhana sruti is only that modifications are fictitiously imposed on the ground (thereof).

This view of the Sūtrakāra is made clear in his own work, 4 the Mahābhārata, through the narrative of Suvarcalā and Svetaketu, set out in the Moka Dharma (parva). This is how it is related there. Suvarcalā, the daughter of Devala knew from birth the truth about Brahman, having acquired it in previous births, and was looking for a husband equal to herself (in knowledge). Having come to understand Svetaketu, son of Uddālaka, to be one such, the father bestowed her of the holy vows on him. That couple who understood the truth about Brahman continued in the house holder's life, which is associated with the performance of sacrifices and other such duties auxiliary to that (Brahma-knowledge). Therein is described the following dialogue between them concerning Brahman.

On one occasion, Suvarcala asked her husband Svetaketu "Who art Thou? Tell me, O best of the twice-born". The lordly one skilled in discourse replied to her "That is known by thee, without a doubt; I am the best of the twice-born, O lovely one, one who practises the vow of truth". She said to him "I ask about the self that rests in the heart". Hearing that, he replied "That (Self) does not speak, O beautiful lady: If thou thinkest what is united to mind to be the Self, that is illusory. Where there is a name, there is (also) the bondage of the body. The thought "I am this" is present in you also. "I am even thou. I am myself, I am all"; this alone holds (true). That which thou askest of me, that Being higher than thyself is not here".

Here, in order to find out how Svetaketu, -who has been repeatedly taught by his father "That thou art" in the Sad Vidya, -- understood the Self, the first question "Who art thou, O best of the twice-born?" is put (to him) by Suvarcala. Though understanding the object of the question, yet in the belief that she should be taught the sense (of the Self) by stages, this reply is given by Svetaketu: "by thee who addressest me as best of the twice-born, I am certainly known to be a Brahmin: why then is this questioned?" Then it is said by Suvarcala "I do not ask about the Brahminhood that is perceptible and is imagined in the Self, as limited by bodily conditions; rather do I ask about that Self, which thou dost designate by the word 'I' in the statement 'I am the best of the twice-born', as different from the body and as residing in the heart". To her is this reply given: "The word 'I' applies to that aspect of the Self which is associated with the mind; that however, is of an illusory character; terms like Brahmin etc., which are posited in connection with the bodies of Brahmins and so on, born of Brahmin families and so on, apply only to that (illusory form). Hence, since 'I-ness' also, like Brahminhood, refers to what is imagined, it is not fit to be questioned about by those who seek to know the nature of the Self, This 'I ness' is comon to thee and me and to all beings including lower orders of creation; hence, by thee, who seekest knowledge of the nature of the Self, this question which does not refer to the transcendental reality is not fit to be put." Then (there is) the question "If thou dost understand the 'I' which is associated with the properties of being agent and enjoyer to be fictitious, then, understanding thus, how dost thou engage in the observance of action which is opposed thereto?" To that is the reply given: "I engage in them for the benefit of the world, though they are not helpful to one-self". Then, a question is asked about the connection between sound and significance, with a view to (find out) how this word "I" applied by all to refer to the Self can fail to signify that. To that the reply is given that between them there is not the relation of conjunction and the like, but the relationship of statement and what is stated. Then follows this series of questions and answers between the couple:

Suvarcalā: This word (I) signifying egoity is clearly always applied to to the Self; (hence) the statement that speech does not apply thereto becomes fictitious.

Syetaketu: The word 'I', O one of holy vows, applies to egoity, not to the nature of the Self; speech which is characteristic of the qualified does not apply to the Supreme, Imponderable One.

Suvarcala: If this be so, O best of Sages, tell me then what is egoity and also what is the nature of the Self.

Svetaketu: Like the appearance of a pitcher in what is verily, (but) a mass of clay, even so is egoity recognised here in the Supreme, Imponderable (One); the nature of the Self is Great and Supreme. Hence, there is no inconsistency in the statement that speech turns back therefrom.

Here, the question is asked how, if sound and sense be related as what signifies and what is signified, the word "I" could fail to signify the Self: to this is given the reply that the word "I" is applied, primarily, not to the Self, but to egoity. Then the ques-are distinguished, in that egoity is illusorily posited in the Self, like the form of pitcher etc., in clay; and it is concluded that the word which sets out as applying to the illusorily posited form cannot reach up to the pure substrate, as the word "silver" does not extend to the form of the pure mother of pearl. Therefore, it is concluded that since the word which signifies the ego, qualified by agency and other attributes is said to turn back even from the neighbourhood of the Pure Self, there is no contradiction whatever. Then on the assumption that, Brahman, the abode of the whole world, is nothing but the Self, which is fully discriminated from what is designated by "I", Svetaketu teaches that just as, though the world is seen to be in ether, yet there is not for the ether any clinging to the world, so too there is no clinging for for Brahman. Then this fresh question and answer:

Suvarcalā: The ether is constantly perceived to be unchangeable, super-sensible, impartible and omnipresent; (but) the Self is not so perceived.

Svetaketu: One feels by contact again and again the air that is in the ether; one smells the smell present therein; one similarly sees with the eyes light, darkness, the host of solar rays, the assemblage of clouds, rain and the constellations, but does not see the ether. That which is the nature of Existence is determined to be the Ether even of the ether. This (ether) is imagined in the Existential Substance; that is the true, and (that is) but Vienu. Names which signify the qualified apply to the Supreme Self figuratively. The Supreme all-pervasive one is not (known) by the eyes or by the mind or by any other means; it is thought by the subtle intellect; it cannot be described by speech. All this wide world is established therein alone.

The question is "Why is Brahman, the abode of the Universe, not perceptible like the ether?" This is the reply given thereto: there is experience only of air etc., as present in the ether, not of the ether as distinct (from them); if that be the case with ether, though an object of experience, what more need be said of Brahman, of the form of Existence, who is far more subtle than ether? Therefore, everything is imagined in the Existential Substance; that alone is true and pervasive, and all words applicable to what is limited by qualities do not apply in their primary sense to that which is distinguished from the qualities, and is understood by means of knowledge which makes known the real. In this series of questions and answers it is quite clear that by the citation of the example of the appearance of pot, in what is, verily, clay, by the declaration—in the words "That which is of the nature of Exissence is determined "etc., - that the finite self of the context is of the form of Existence, and by the statement "This is imagined in the Existential Substance; that is true, (that is) but Vignu", the sense of the vacarambhana text (Ch. VI. 1. 4) and of the texts "That Thou art" and "In that has all this its Self, that is the true, that is the Self" (Ch. VI, 9, 4) are shown to favour the conclusion that Brahman is unrelated to the world, non-distinct from the finite self, and free from qualifications.

Further, in another context in the Moksa Dharma itself, non-difference is set forth in these words: "I desire, O Divinity, Thy Supreme Abode; let there be identity of me with Thee; let there be for me no re-birth; when a man sees different things as non-different, then he is free from taint, becomes none other than the Supreme Self"; "The collocation of the assemblage of elements is not the body of the Supreme Self; that Visnu who is embodied as it were, is the delusive Hari"; in such words is (the) formlessness (of Brahman) set forth. In the Viṣṇupurāṇa and the like, also, the nature of Brahman, as Pure Intelligence, free from all difference, and devoid of qualifications, is declared thus: "That Knowledge, wherein all differences have disappeared, which is of the bare nature of existence, which is unattainable by speech, and is self-realised, that is known as Brahman". Thus, pure-non-dualism alone is what is accepted by the Sūtrakāra; since the commentator (Śrīkaṇṭha) elaborates pure-non-dualism here and there, after his (the Sūtrakāra's) own heart, the object of the setting forth of qualified-non-dualism in other places must be explained only in conformity therewith, in the manner declared by us.

As for the demonstration of qualified-non-dualism in the commentary of others and of pure-non-dualism in the commentary of yet others, that is in the view of the falsity of that (pure non-Of these, it is not possible to make out, as in the case dualism). of Srikanthacarya's (commentary), an interpretation conformable to pure non-dualism; for, nowhere has there been shown by them as by Srikanthacarya, any indication of pure-non-dualism in the sense above set forth. Further, those who succeeded either of the commentators up to this day, have been ready only to condemn pure-non dualism. Therefore, the only commentary that may be accepted by those who have regard for the means of correct knowledge is that of Srikanthacarya, which alone is set out (1) for the purpose of the true comprehension of the Non-qualified Supreme Brahman, (2) for the purpose of the meditation of non-difference, to be performed by him of middling capacity, in respect of the Being who has taken on the form of the Qualified, to show grace to His devotees, and is characterised by the entire host of auspicious qualities, and a resplendent auspicious form, and (3) for the purpose of the meditation of the relationship of one-self and one's master, to be carried on by him of least capacity,—all these being appropriately distinguished: thus everything is consistent.

Here ends the work called "SIVADVAITA NIRNAYA" composed through the grace of the Supreme Siva,—the Highest Real, the fore-head-eyed,—by the direct descendant (of the Lord), known to fame as Appayya, the son of Ranga Rāja, best of sacrificers, the performer of the Viśvajit Sacrifice, and the great preceptor of the Advaita School of Thought, (who shone as) the gem in the Ocean of the family of Bhāradvāja.

The translation of the Sutra and Vatsyayana's bhasya thereon are here set forth: "In Reality the Individual, the Configuration and the Generality-(All three) constitute the Denotation of the word—(Su. 68). The term 'tu', in reality, serves the purposes of 'What is it that is emphasised?' What is meant to emphasis. be emphasised is that all the three are denoted by words,—there being no hard and fast rule as to which one is the predominant and which the subordinate factor. For instance, when there is (on the part of the person pronouncing the word) a desire to lay stress upon the difference (of a thing from others)—and when the cognition brought about is also one pertaining to the distinctive features of that thing-there the 'Individual' forms the predominant factor (in the denotation of that word) and the 'Generality and the 'Configuration' are subordinate factors; when, on the other hand, the difference is not meant to be emphasised,—and the resultant cognition also pertains to the commonalties, -then the 'Generality' is the predominant' factor, and the 'Individual' and the 'Configuration' are subordinate factors. Many instances (of such varying predominance and subservience) may be found in actual usages. An example of the predominance of 'Configuration' may also be found" (Dr. Jha's translation of the Nyāya Sūtras Vol. II. pp. 448-449).

Dr. Jha's use of the word "denotation" in place of the more general term "significance" tends to introduce a slight confusion. Jati and akrif would more naturally constitute part of the connotation rather than the denotation of the word; the latter is more properly the vyakti. The Naiyāyika's insistence on all three constituting the significance is parallel to the western logician's doctrine that every term possesses both connotation and denotation, though, with different classes of terms, either aspect may dominate over the other. The important point is that they all together constitute one sense, not different senses of the word. Disjunction of the three is not meant, as seen by the use of the singular number in padarthah. The Buddhist who holds terms to have no possitive significance, but only to perform the function of excluding (Apoha) the significance of other words, makes the mistake of separating these three aspects, and then failing to understand how a word can function usefully as referring to any one of them alone. His position is set out and refuted elaborately in the "Nyāya Vārtika." See also Keith's Indian Logic and Atomism, p. 159. It is unfortunate that this author too uses the word "denotes", where "signifies" is distinctly preferable. Professor Radhakrishnan's exposition of the topic seems elear and less open to objection. "The word" he says "suggests the form, denotes the individual and connotes the genus" (Indian Philosophy, II, p. 107) the 'Generality' is the predominant' factor, and the 'Individual' and the 'Configuration' are subordinate factors. Many instances and the tuok varying predominance and subservience) have be found in Trib prathamam anväha triruttamam [p. 2:324].

The Darsa Purnamasa sacrifice is the model for several other sacrifices. The former is the praktti rite and the latter vikrtis. In the praktti rite, eleven the are prescribed to be chanted in the matter of getting the fire to blaze in the first instance (agni samindhana). These Iks are known as samidheni. The injunction is that fifteen samidhenis are to be chanted (pancadasa samidheniranvaha), while, however, only eleven rks are mentioned. The number fifteen is made up, therefore, by chanting the first and the last rks thrice, instead of once. Now, though the samidheni rks are the same both for the prakrti and all the vikrti rites, their order is not always the same. Thus in the Darsa Pūrņamāsa, the first the is Pravo Vājā etc., and the last Ajuhota etc. But in other rites, any other rk of the eleven may be first, as determined by the nature of the rite, the deity sacrificed to, and so on. The question here is whether the injunction te repeat thrice applies to what may happen to be the first and last rk in each rite, or what is known to be the first and last rk in the praktti rite, in connection with which arises the injunction to three-fold incantation. The final view is that the first and last rks of each particular rite have to be chanted thrice, not those of the prakett rite, the reason being that words "first" and "last" signify position primarily, not what occupies the position in a particular context. The following is taken from Jacob's Laukika Nyāyānjali, Part III. "The rule as to the use or omission of the SodasIstotra (at the Atiratra sacrifice). In very common use as an indication of option being allowable in regard to something. From the introduction to the third volume of Dr. Eggeling's translation of the Satapatha Brahmana, we learn that 'the distinctive feature of the Atiratra-sacrifice, as the name itself indicates, is an overnight performance of chants and recitation ... At the end of each round, libations are offered, followed by the inevitable potations of Soma liquor and the performance partook largely of the character of a regular nocturnal carousal'. Then as to the Sodasin, he says (page xviii)- As regards the ceremonies preceding the night performance, there is a difference of opinion among ritualists as to Whether the Sodasistotra is or is not a necessary element of the Atiratra. Āśvalāyana (5, 11, 1) refers incidentally to the Sodaśin, as part of the Atiratra, though it is not quite clear from the text of the sutra whether it is meant to be a necessary or only an optional feature of that sacrifice.' There can be little doubt. however, that the learned writers who use the nyaya, regard the use of the stotra as optional". (pp. 187-188). It is, however. rather doubtful whether the reference is primarily to the stotra. What is more likely is that the use of the Sodasin cup (the sixteenth cup) is intended. The question, then, would be whether the cup and the accompanying stotra and sastra are necessary elements of the Atiratra sacrifice, the answer being that they are optional, in view of contrary injunctions in respect thereof. See, Keith, Religion and Philosophy of the Veda, pp. 335-336.

The general injunction is that all sacrifice should be performed in the shavaniya fire. In the Asvamedha sacrifice, however, it is enjoined that offerings are to be made in the hoof-marks of the horse. This injunction would be entirely purportless, if the general rule were considered to over-ride it; if however, its validity for the particular sacrifice be admitted, the rule "yadahavaniye juhoti", would be only limited in its application, not nullified. Both injunctions would thus be purportful. The injunction "pade juhoti" would be an exception to the general rule "yadahavaniye juhoti"; the general applicability of the latter should be construed in the light of this exception.

Andho bhavatyapi roditīva etc., [P. 2.52].

The quotation here would appear to be a jumble of words from Chandogya, VIII, 10 and 11. Indra, acquiring knowledge of the Self from Prajapati is told that the dream-self is the Supreme Self. On reflection, Indra finds that that will not do, since, though not affected by bodily defects and impurities, the dream self has its own trials and tribulations: it is wounded, as it were; it cries as it were. He, therefore, goes back to the preceptor, and is told that the self in deep sleep is the Supreme Self. That knowledge too is not free from doubts, for that self reaches annihilation, as it were. If eva here (vinasameva) were understood as alone, there would be no liberation, no manifestation of the Self in its own form and so on. Hence, vinasameva has to be understood on the analogy of roditiva in Ch. VIII, 10, 2 and 4.

Jaivali concerning that knowledge, the teaching of which belonged only to the Ksatriyas and was made available first to Gautama among the Brāhmins. It relates to the five fires which are the Heavenly region, rain, the earth, man, and woman. In the fifth libation, water comes to be called "man". Man lives up to the full span of life, and then dies; at his death, he is carried to the fire wherefrom he originated. Those who know this and those who in the forest meditate upon faith and austerity, they depart on the path of the Gods. Those who do not know this, but spend their lives in works of charity and public utility, they depart on the path of the Fathers, and ultimately return to this world, after their stock of merit is exhausted by enjoyment. The Sun, it is said, is verily the honey of the devas. Its rays spreading east, south, west, north and upwards constitute the honey-cells in each of these directions. The honey-producers in each case are the Rks, the Yajus verses, the Sāmans. Atharvāngirasa, and the secret instruction (guhya ādeśah). The waters in each case (i.e., the Soma juice, butter, milk, etc., poured into the fire) are the nectar. He who knows the first kind of nectar becomes a Vasu, and retains his status so long as the Sun rises in the east and sets out in the west. He who knows the second nectar becomes a Rudra, for as long as the Sun rises to the south and sets to the north. He who knows the third nectar becomes an Āditya, for as long as the Sun rises in the west and sets to the east. He who knows the fourth nectar becomes a Marut for as long as the Sun rises in the north and sets in the south. He who knows the fifth nectar becomes a Sadhya for as long as the Sun rises over-head and sets down below. Thus are described the various forms of meditation on the Sun as honey, and the fruit thereof. The fruit is limited through admitting of different degrees of duration. Not so, however, is the fruit of Brahma-knowledge, the realisation of that Supreme Being which neither rises nor sets. The Bliss attained thereby is illimitable, indestructible. Hence, even those who by the practice of Madhu Vidya have attained the comparatively happy status of Vasus etc., have to seek Brahma Vidya, their status being but transient. But, in the case of these, departure along the path of the gods is obviously unsuitable, that path having been prescribed for beings on the lower, human plane of existence. The reference is to Chandogya, Chapter III, Khandas 1 to 11 (both inclusive). The jyotistoma sacrifice serves as the model (prakti) for several other rites (viktis). Two of these are the Isu and the Syena. In prescribing the conduct of the Isu, certain distinctive elements are first mentioned and it is then said that in the rest there is agreement with the Syena. It is contended by some that the distinctive features having been already mentioned, the general clause refers only to those elements which the Isu derives from jyotistoma, which serves as the model. The mention of the Syena has no special significance, that rite being cited only as another instance of a rite modelled on the jyotistoma. The final view is that the similarity is in respect not of the general features common to the praktti and viktti rites, but of the distinctive rites of the Syena. Thus, the Riviks in the Svena rite should wear red turbans; the Riviks in the Isu should do like-wise. The reason for this conclusion is that otherwise the statement 'samanam iterat sysnena' becomes merely repetitive, thus losing its force and authority. No Scriptural passage may be interpreted in such a way as to make it lose its authoritativeness, unless there is no help for it. In the present case, no such necessity arises. The word 'itarat' means what is other and goes beyond not merely the distinctive Isu rites already mentioned, but also those elements known to be common to the jyotistoma and the Isu on the ground of their being related as prakrti and vikrti. The similarity intended and enjoined can be only in respect of the distinctive elements of the Syena. Thus, the mention of the word Syena also becomes purportful. The part of the discussion which is relevant to Appayya's purpose is this: where resemblance is mentioned after the citation of certain distinctive elements, that resemblance must be in respect of other elements which are also distinctive, not those common to the prakrti and all other vikrtis thereof. For a full discussion of the topic, see Purva Mimamsa, VII, 13-16 and Sabarasvamin's commentary thereon. terminology, the principle is that of ejusdem generis.

The six limbs of Bhava are Omniscience, Contentment, Eternal Wisdom, Independence, Eternal Illimitable Resources, and Unimaginationable Power; the ten members are Knowledge, Nonattachment, Lordly power, Austerity, Truth, Mercy, Firmness, Creatorship, Self-knowledge, and Controllership. The enumeration is that of the author of the Kalpataru who bases himself on Purāṇic authority (see p. 4 of Anantakṛṣṇa Sāstrin's edition).

The Advaitin's conception of Mukti. [P. 8.235-3.2855].

Appayya Dikeita shows with considerable skill and trouble that even for him in whom nescience has ceased, liberation takes the form of the attainment not of Brahman, but of Iśvara, endowed with innumerable auspicious qualities and so on. Identity with Brahman is possible only when all finite selves are liberated. So long as there is a residue of Karma even for one finite self, the liberated one can attain only the nature of Iśvara. For, on the hypothesis that there are many finite selves and that each finite self is Iśvara, as reflected in māyā, with the cessation of māyā for one finite self, all that results is the merger of that reflection with the original that was reflected, that is, in other words, the merger of that jīva with Iśvara. But so long as there are other jīvas, Iśvara continues reflected; and the being that has got merged with Iévara can claim nothing higher. When all finite selves are liberated, māyā as a whole vanishes, Iévara is no longer a bimba, a being capable of being reflected; both He and the finite selves realise their identity in Brahman that is Pure Intelligence.

The doctrine is attractive in many ways. The prospect of merger in Nirguna Brahman does not appeal either to the intellects or to the emotions of most. It seems difficult to realise how one being can become the Absolute while others are left to wallow in ignorance; and the ideal even if possible, seems undesirable, being clearly anti-social. The difficulty in accepting this doctrine is due to the fact that the hypothesis of a plurality of finite selves is not the only possible one for the advaitin. There are the ekajīvavādins, for whom clearly enlightenment should lead There are also those directly to identification with Brahman. who consider that Isvara Himself is a reflection (a pratibimba not a bimba), that Isvara is Brahman as reflected in māyā, and ilva is Brahman as reflected in avidya. On this hypothesis too, irrespective of the unity or plurality of souls, release would necessarily have to be identification with Brahman; for the merger of a reflection in the original is intelligible, not its merger in another reflection, like Isvara; if the latter were possible, then one jiva might as well become another jiva, and the so-called release would be no release at all.

Appayya, has, therefore, to show that his own hypothesis of the plurality of souls and the bimbatva of the Lord is the only tenable one. This he does in the 'Siddhanta-leśa-samgraha,' by showing, as in the present work, that his own view of mukti is the orthodox advaita view, being that of the Bhagavatpada himself. The argument is developed at some length with reference to each chapter of the Sūtras, and is substantially identical with that of the present work. There is a slight elaboration in respect of one or two points, which may tend to indicate that the Samgraha is the later work. Thus, demonstrating through statements from the bhāṣyakāra's mouth that release consists in the attainment of the being of Īśvara, Appayya argues back and says that the ekajtvavāda and the Īśvara-pratibimbavāda are untenable, as they are inconsistent with the orthodox view of mukti. The only advaita work which he explicitly condemns as hostile to his view is the Saṃkṣepa Śārīraka.

The doubt naturally arises as to how this mukti is different from that attained by the devotees of Saguna Brahman. The difference is in that the latter, seeking the Lord through devotion, never attain to an intuition of the Impartible Absolute, and that, therefore, they continue still to be enveloped in ignorance. Theirs is not the full measure of the being or the bliss of Saguna Brahman. They are equal to Him, but only in respect of enjoyment; theirs is not the unsurpassable lordship of Isvara Himself, the power to create, sustain and destroy the universe. He who becomes Isvara by realisation of non-duality becomes Isvara with no reservations.

On the whole subject, see further 'Siddhanta-leas-samgraha,' pp. 447 to end, and the daharadhikarana of the Nyaya Rakaamani; Dharmarajadhvarin's Vedanta Paribhasa may also be consulted; see, particularly, Prof. S. The following is from Apte's Sanskrit-English Dictionary: "In a cooking-pot all the grains being equally moistened by the heated water, when one grain is found to be well-cooked, the same way may be inferred with regard to the other grains. Jacob (Laukika Nyāyānjali, I, 24) explains this as "the maxim of the tongue (smeared) with treacle (in order to disguise an unpalatable draught)". He also quotes a passage from the Vācaspatya, which says that just as a parent makes his child, who is afraid of the bitterness of the essence of neem, drink the essence after first coating his tongue with treacle, even so do the eulogistic passages serve to engage human beings in the performance of rites requiring the expenditure of great energy and labour, by extolling the fruit of those rites as everlasting heavenly bliss and so on. In the present translation, the phrase "maxim of the sugar-coated capsule" has been used, as serving to convey the same sense in a manner more familiar to most present-day readers.

This is the maxim "What a man meditates on, that he becomes". The Scriptural authority for this is a Chandogya passage, which, after prescribing calm meditation on Brahman as that in which all this begins, ends and continues, goes on to say to show the need for it saying, "Yatha kraturasmin loke puruso bhavati tathetah pretya bhavati, according as his will is in this world, so will the man be after he has departed hence" (Ch. III, 14, 1; the translation is Dr. Jha's). The following is from Samkara's commentary on the same: "According as a man's will or determination is, in this world, during his present life,—so does he become when he has departed from this body; that is to say, his condition is in keeping with the result in accordance with his will. This fact we come to know from the Scriptures: 'Thinking over whatever disposition, one renounces the body in the end etc.,' (Bhagavad Gītā). And inasmuch as such sequence is maintained by the Scriptures, one who knows this, should have this will, -i.e., the will or determination that we are going to explain" (Dr. Jha's translation, p. 181).

Parețăm bhasye visistădvaita nirupanam, anyețăm bhasye suddhadvaita nirupanam. [P. 5.]

The reference seems to be to Rāmānuja and Madhva, these two being explicitly mentioned in the corresponding portions of the Ānanda Lahari. This is a rough translation of verse 58 of that work: "The declaration of the enjoyment of the bliss of Brahman, by the released ones, as in this (bhānya), contradicts the (doctrine of) difference between Brahman and the finite self; there are other similar indications in other bhānyas; but these come in, somehow, in the failure to realise their self-contradictory nature, not as prompted by the realisation of essential non-difference; for, they are confirmed haters of pure Brahman, as also of Saguna Siva, suffering as they do from the curse of Dadhiei and others."

The other indications mentioned in the verse are explained in the introduction to the verse, with reference to the system of Madhva. The bonds of the jiva are, in that system, unreal; there are no attributes differentiating the jiva from Brahman, except dharma; Brahman who is known by him who seeks release is not an object of meditation; the jiva is a reflection of Brahman; avidyā (nescience) is removable by knowledge, and so on. But these are not genuine indications of the acceptance of non-difference as final. For, though at release the finite self is said to enjoy the bliss of Brahman, yet other selves are recognised who, failing to obtain true knowledge of Brahman, attain asan-mukti, fall into the three hells, and suffer everlastingly. This is incompatible with non-difference. Further, neither Ramanuja nor Madhva rises to the conception of release as the attainment of the state of the Attributeless Brahman. As for the indications in Madhva's system, he himself interprets his doctrines in such a way as to lend no colour even to a suspicion of acceptance of nondualism. Thus, though the bonds are fictitious in relation to the ilva, they are real enough in relation to the internal organ (the antah-karana); though the jiva is a reflection of Brahman, they are yet distinct, like the face and its reflection; though avidya is removable by knowledge, the former has yet a true existence; and so on. Though their admissions cut at their own positions, they make these not in the recognition of advaita, but in the failure to realise that they are helplessly falling into the pit of self-contradiction. They suffer to this day from the curses of Gautama, Dadhici, Upamanyu, Nandikeśvara and others. Their minds are tainted by the hatred of the superiority of Suddhādvaita and Parama Siva. Imagining themselves to be Vaisnavas, they shower multifarious abuse both on the doctrine of the pure-non-duality of the attributeless Brahman and on Parama Siva.

The concluding words of the 'Ananda Lahari' contain a fine tribute to Srikantha, which is worth noting here. Though in the commentary there cannot be seen any out-spoken criticism or upholding of his position by the abuse of that of others, yet the bhasya written by the great lord seated on the throne of the empire of knowledge (vidya samrajya) leaves all this to be done by the commentators thereon, merely giving an indication thereto, just as a great lord, in order to protect his dominions from the inroads of robbers, signals to his servants to look to that business, merely by knitting his eye-brows.

self-controllarion. They suiter to this day from the curses of Gautema, Dadotci, Upamanyu, Nandikesyara and others. They minds are tainted by the hatrad of the engergity of Suddonds atta and Parama Sive. Imagining this appears to be Valenayas, they shower multifarious above bottom the doctrine of the pure non-thants of the englanding direction on Parama Sive.

The constuding words of the 'Sasada Lanari' contain a fine tribute to Seglaphia, which is worth noting here. Though in the commentary there ognized be went on antispoised original or appoint of this position by the abose of that of others, yet the bhappa written by the great lord scaled on the throne of the empire of knowledge tribys assurabled to see at this to be done by the commentators thereon, morely giving an indication thereto, just as a great tork of order to protect the dominions from the arrows of robiners, argued to me everyones to look to that hereing marchy by knitting his gradule to me everyones to look to that hereines, marchy by knitting his gradules to me everyones to look to that hereiness, marchy by knitting his gradules.
